This had the desired effect and last Sunday saw all saloons closed tight, and all slot machines turned to the wall. The citizens committee is keeping close watch of the situation, and any lapse will be followed by immediate prosecution.

"Honking" Is Death Knell.

Gettysburg, S. D., Oct. 26.—Thomas Welch, who was hauling water for a threshing outfit at work near Copp, was killed in a runaway for which the "honking" of an automobile horn is said to have been responsible.

Five Trainmen Hurt.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 26.—Running at a speed estimated at fifty miles an hour, the fast train known as the "Cleveland flyer" was side-swiped by the caboose of a freight train yesterday. Five trainmen were injured.

Burglars Are Caught.

Minneapolis, Oct. 26.—While a police officer stood watching them from a doorway across the street, three men broke a plate glass window in R. G. Winter's jewelry store, 608 Nicollet avenue, early yesterday morning and attempted to rifle the show window.

Why not make Governor Johnson's re-election unanimous?

Thief River Falls won the fight. Let them rejoice and make merry, we only hope they will build their bonfire big enough to be seen down here.

How foolish those republican papers must feel that asserted so positively and without any reservation whatever that Cole would be the next governor.

Two years ago Roosevelt, rep., carried Minnesota by 161,000 majority; this year Johnson, dem., carries it by 75,000. What a landslide was there my countrymen!

Cole the populist, the democrat, the republican; Cole the tergiversationist, the political acrobat and contortionist is too dead politically for even a thot of sepulture. Vaie Cole!

Victory in the early stages of the game has often intoxicated the victors to their own undoing. It may be so in the county seat contest for it will surely spur Red Lake Falls on to greater efforts if it ever comes to a vote.

Peril of Swollen Fortunes.

Wall Street Journal: "It is our clear duty to see, in the interest of the people, that there is adequate supervision and control over the business use of the swollen fortunes of today." President Roosevelt is not the only one who has discovered in great individual fortunes a possible peril to American liberties. As long ago in 1849 Horace Mann, one of the most patriotic and unselfish servants of the people this country has ever produced and to whom it owes in largest measure its present great system of public school education, said: "Vast fortunes are misfortunes to the state. They confer irresponsible power and human nature, except in the rarest instances, has proved incapable of wielding irresponsible power without abuse. The feudalism of capital is not a whit less formidable than the feudalism of force. The millionaire of our day is no less dangerous to the welfare of the community than was the baronial lord of the Middle Age."

PRINCE AND THE PEACHES.

Stories Told of Bignon of a Famous Old Parisian Cafe.

Bignon is dead. The Bignon who just died is M. L. Bignon, proprietor of the Cafe Riche, at the corner of Rue le Pelletier with the boulevard. He was ninety years of age, and made a considerable fortune. The riche was much frequented by the brilliant wits of the day, such as Aurelien Scholl, Henri Rochefort and Albert Wolff, says the Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette. One day Scholl, who was lunching at the Riche, thought he had got the better of the "patron." His bill came to 28 francs. It so happened that the celebrated journalist had been charged only a couple of days before 23 francs for a lunch of precisely the same menu; that is to say, two eggs, a cutlet, a vegetable, dessert and coffee and half a bottle of burgundy.

Fortunately he had kept the bill. He called Bignon to him, and in a tone of easy triumph confronted the restaurateur with the two varying accounts. "Ah," said Bignon, "I must consult the bookkeeper," and hurried away to the desk. Presently he returned. "The cashier has made a mistake," he said. "She charged 5 francs too little the other day. But, my dear sir, we will not claim it." Scholl had no reply for it.

On another occasion Prince Demidoff, a member of the wealthy Russian family, was charged 5 shillings for a peach. "How rare peaches are this year!" he observed. "Oh, not at all," said Bingon, "but Prince Demidoffs are."

BURROS AND TREASURE LOST.

Pack Animals Carrying $100,000 in Bullion Drown in Mexican River.

The American owners of mines situated in the State of Simaloa, Mex., re still mourning the loss of $100,000 of gold and silver bullion which was lost several months ago in a remarkable manner. The train of donkeys, loaded with bullion, was on its way to Mazatlan, at which point the precious cargoes were to be shipped to San Francisco.

The animals were going along a narrow trail bordering high above the Piaxtia river, when the roadway, softened by the rains, suddenly caved into the river, the animals and bullion and a number of Mexican drivers disappearing in the current.

As soon as the news of the heavy loss reached the owners of the mines a large force of men was sent out to search for the treasure, a search that has been in progress for some time, but not a single bar of the bullion has been recovered. It is supposed that the animals with their freight were swept down the river into the Pacific ocean. The hunt for the bullion is still on and a group of employes are patroling the river day and night for a distance of more than 100 miles to keep outsiders from searching and getting away with the treasure.

Most people know that if they have been sick they need Scott's Emulsion to bring back health and strength.

But the strongest point about Scott's Emulsion is that you don't have to be sick to get results from it.

It keeps up the athlete's strength, puts fat on thin people, makes a fretful baby happy, brings color to a pale girl's cheeks, and prevents coughs, colds and consumption.

Food in concentrated form for sick and well, young and old, rich and poor.

ASSOCIATION'S MEETING

Northwestern Minnesota Educational Association Meets at Crookston.

The Crookston meeting of the Northwestern Minnesota Educational association, for the 15 and 16 of November, promises to be one of the largest and most profitable meetings of the kind held in this part of the state in years. The program which will be out in a dav or two is a full and suggestive one, and provides for several new and interesting features.

The Educational exhibit will be made up of specimens of school work of all kinds from the lowest to the highest grades. It will also include displays of school programs and the administration blanks of principals, county and city superintendents, school officers and supervisors. Every teacher and school man in any capacity is asked to send in specimens of work, copies of their working program, and sets of blanks of all kinds used in their administrative work. Send to Mr. E. E. McIntyre of Crookston not later than Tuesday preceding the meeting.

Round tables for the discussion of English, Science and Latin in the high school, for grammar and intermediate grades, primary grades, and for rural school teachers are being arranged for and will be conducted by men and women known for the proficiency in their respective subjects. A portion of the time will be given to systematic visitation of the Crookston city school. Social and entertainment features are also conspicuous in the program. Two lectures by distinguished educators for Thursday and Friday evenings are arranged far. Following are a few of the prominent school men who will participate: Supt. J. A. VanDyke, Coleraine; Pres. F. A. Weld, Moorhead Normal; Pres. W. A. Shoemaker, St. Cloud Normal; Geo. B. Aiton, State Inspector High School, Minneapolis; Supt. A. S. Kingsford, Moorhead; Prof. Joseph Kennedy, State University of N. D.; Asst. State Supt. C. G. Shultz; Dr. Geo. F. Jams, State University of Minnesota; and many others.

Low railroad and hotel rates for this meeting have been secured. The Crookston teachers are planning to provide free entertainments to most if not all the lady visitors. Everything is being done by the officers and the Crookston people to make the meeting interesting and valuable.

Another new feature of the meeting is a convention of Polk County School officers, which is being called, and will be presided over by Co. Supt. Thos. Casey. School offices are allowed by the county mileage and $3.00 expense money for one day's attendance at this meeting. Questions of importance to school officers will be discussed, and Asst. State Supt. C. G. Schulz of St. Paul will be present and address the meeting. Every school officer in the county should attend this meeting. School boards should give their teachers these two days and insist upon their attending the meeting. It will be more than returned to the district in increased efficiency of the teachers.

Teachers intending to go the meeting, or school intending to send exhibits are requested to so notify Supt. McIntire early in order that all arrangements may be made for properly accommodating visitors, and displaying the school work.

Supt. Thos. Casey will also be glad to give any information relative to the meetings of the school officers and teachers.

To secure the benefits of railroad rates all visitors are asked to observe carefully directions:

1. Take a receipt, or certificate of every agent of whom you buy a ticket.
2. On reaching Crookston present your certificate to the secretary of the association, pay your membership fee of 25c, and receive a badge. Her signature will make the certificate good for your return home at ⅓ the regular rate, and the badge will entitle you to hotel rates. Office at the high school building.
3. Those coming in a body on a party ticket should also take a receipt, as they are counted in making up the necessary total of 100 required by the Western Passenger association.

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XVIII—(Continued.)

The inventors of the Book of Proverbs were beyond doubt a set of wise and experienced people, and the great, grave king who collated and edited the current wisdom of the East was himself among the wisest of mankind. And yet he allowed to pass beyond his censure the amazing dictum that the net is spread in vain in the sight of any bird. Simple Belle Molloy could have told Solomon better than that.

She and Billery parted for the time being at the church door and went to their respective places, and sat out the service with the rigid air of devotion. What the gentleman thought about is not worth inquiry, for he dropped into one of those brown studies into which all but the most ardent of churchgoers do sometimes fall, and allowed his mind to play vacuously over a thousand things which were each forgotten as soon as they floated to the top of the waters of his sleepy intelligence. But the lady thought about gentlemen. He had a little—though she knew that it must be a very little indeed—of his own; the merest small fragment of a wasted fortune, which, of itself, would scarce suffice to hold body and soul together. But then he had a position on the Record, and he was an intimate friend and associate of its wealthy and influential proprietor, and he was undoubtedly a very clever man, and had in him the faculty to do well if only he were kept in order. And Miss Belle had a little in her own right—not so little but that with good management it could be made to serve for two. And she rather thought that Billery might prove a very tractable partner if reasonable means were found to lead him on the path on which he ought to go.

What a very different place the world would be if it should ever come to pass that everybody will be able to tell what everybody else is thinking about. There are many scientific gentlemen who are teaching us to look in this direction, but in the meantime we lie snug enough in our own contemplations, each weaving out of our own cocoon, and quite safe from the intrusion of our acutest neighbors. Miss Belle marshalled all her forces and thought out all her plans within a score of yards of her intended victim, and the good, easy man never came within a mile of guessing it.

When the service was over they met at the porch again, and after a few minutes of greeting and gossip they strolled away, side by side, in the sunny, languid weather, with the Sabbath peace everywhere about the tranquil fields. In a little while they were sitting on the veranda, overlooking the well-kept small garden and the broad shining river. Miss Cole, a faded lady of some two score years, who played at being Miss Belle's chaperon, was making tea in the drawing room, and Billery had leave given him to smoke a cigarette. The odors of the garden and the scent of the tea and the tobacco mingled agreeably together and a cool breeze came up from the river.

Miss Molloy had taken off her hat and was thoughtfully sticking a long hatpin through it, and her hair was prettily disordered by the breeze. She had really beautiful hair of a fine glossy chestnut tinge, and it waved and curled quite naturally, and was always disposed to rebel from strict order. For some reason the lady's color came and went, and her bosom heaved with a slight irregularity. There was a silence which lasted for two or three minutes, and Miss Cole came out on the veranda with a tray, which she deposited very carefully on a small bamboo table. It was well that she had already placed it there, for, as she afterward declared, she felt as if she had been struck by lightning and deprived of her forces when Miss Molloy said:

"Did you ever think of settlin' down in life, Mr. Billery?"

"Settling down?" said Billery, waking from a new day-dream. "No. I don't think I ever did. Matrimonially —I suppose you mean?"

"Can I offer you a cup of tea?" asked the lady.

"Thanks, very much," said Billery; "your tea is always delicious, Miss Molloy."

"Now," Miss Molloy retorted, "if you really thought that, ye'd come oftener for it. Don't ye think so, Fanny?"

Miss Cole coughed an embarrassed little cough and laughed an embarrassed little laugh, and said she really couldn't say.

"Do you like it sweet?" asked Miss Belle, bending forward toward Billery with the sugar tongs hovering over the bowl, and her eyes raised just at the telling angle.

"No, no," said Billery, with what Miss Cole took to be a meaning emphasis; "only one lump. No more."

"Cream?" said Miss Belle.

"Very little," said Billery. And again Miss Cole, who was unduly sensitive, thought she read a meaning in the tone. But Billery was literalness itself, from his boots to the little upstanding peak of hair which crowned his forehead.

"Now I should have thought," said Miss Molloy, tendering the cup with one hand and a plate of delicately cut bread and butter with the other, "I should have thought that you were one of the last men in the world to be content with a permanent solitude."

"I don't know," said Billery. "I never gave much thought to it. I really don't suppose that anybody would have me if I did." He bit contemptuously and looked innocently at Miss Molloy, with something of interrogation in his glance.

"Oh!" cried Miss Molloy, "that's rubbish, and ye know it. There's a thousand that would jump at ye. I suppose now, that ye never looked on me as a matchmaker. But I am, and I'm wan of the most determined ye ever encountered. I've quite made up me mind, Mr. Billery. I'm going to find a charming young lady for ye, and I'm going to make a match between ye. Now ye're warned, and ye'll see if I'm not as good as me word."

"I don't know," said Billery. "I suppose that I'm an incorrigible. If I hadn't been, you see, I should have thought of it at one time or another, but I never did."

"Oh, Mr. Billery!" cried Miss Belle, raising both hands with a protesting laugh.

"I never did, upon my word," Billery declared. "I'm getting on for forty. It never occurred to me to think of it before, but I suppose that by this time I'm a confirmed old bachelor.

"But just think of it," urged Miss Molloy. "Think of the lonely and desolate old age ye're preparing for yourself. I've heard ye say that ye've not a relative in the world."

"Not one," Billery answered. "It is rather a cold outlook when one comes to examine it. But then, you know, Miss Molloy, there's an old proverb which says that what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. And if that's true you'd naturally suppose that what's sause for the gander is sauce for the goose. You've chosen a life of single blessedness for yourself so far. You ought to take a line of your own counsel, you know, Miss Molloy, and have pity on some one among the sighing scores. There must have been hundreds of them first and last."

"Faith, then," said Miss Molloy, with perfect candor and courage, "I've not seen them. No, Mr. Billery. The sauce for the gander is not the sauce for the goose. The goose has to wait till the gander asks her; and, upon my word, he's such a gander in me own poor experience that he won't do it."

"You'll never get me to believe that," said Billery, gallantly.

"Will I not then?" asked Miss Belle. "There was a young lieutenant of foot, with twopence a year for his income beyond his pay; and a widowed curate with a family; and a person born and brought up in the stables, who'd have found me very moderate little fortune come in handy, and—oh, there's a list, no doubt, but it's not worth thinkin' nor talkin' about. But it's not my fate we're arranging, Mr. Billery, but your own. Ye really ought to think about it seriously, and not lose time."

Miss Cole had disappeared. She was within earshot, and Miss Molloy knew it, but Billery knew only that Miss Molloy and he were alone.

"Well, possibly," he said, "I might have done, once upon a time, but—you've known me a long time, Miss Molloy, and we're very old friends by now, and I can speak to you seriously, can't I? There's a very good reason why I should never ask any good woman to share my life. I am one of the world's failures. You know why."

"But that's all over," said Belle, laying a hand on one of his. "That's done with for good and all."

"I wish it were," said he; "I wish it were. There's dear old Truscott been shepherding me for months past, and I've been making him a promise from month to month, and once a month he lets me have my beastly way for a single night, and then he starts me off anew, and I pull through somehow."

"Well," said Belle, with a half sigh and half a laugh, "do you think a wife wouldn't do that for ye as well as Mr. Truscott?"

"She might," said Billery, "if I could find one woman in a million,"

"Ye don't need a woman in a million," cried Miss Molloy. "No. Nor a woman in a score. Why, I'd do as much as that meself, or I'd know the reason why." She laughed as she spoke. The laugh was tremulous, but she carried it through bravely.

"Would you, by Jove?" asked Billery, with a sudden seriousness. "By George, now, if you only would. But there. I've no right to take a girlish joke like that and turn it into earnest."

"Ye'd best not ask me that again, if ye want to save your liberty, I can tell ye," cried Miss Belle.

"No," said Billery. "But would you? Seriously?"

"'Deed, I would, then," returned Miss Molloy.

"Well," cried Billery, "I'm a lucky beggar to have found a friend like that. You—you mean it?"

"Oh, I mean it," said Miss Molloy. "And before I've done with ye I'll have made ye one of the finest men in the world. Ye're one of the nicest already, and I don't mind telling ye, now that it's all arranged, that I always thought so."

CHAPTER XIX.

Aloysius, after many false starts and many fits of contemplative idleness, had finished the task he had set before himself. He had never found his own critical faculty so hard to satisfy, for in this one work nothing less than perfection, so far as he could conceive it, could content him. Lilian sat among the children bending down ward a little, but with the head just raised with a movement of exquisite spontaneity, as if on the instant she had looked upward at some imagined figure in the story she was telling. A raised finger called for silence. The lips were parted and were on the verge of a smile. They seemed to speak.

The little group stood or sat round, with rapt faces and in attitudes of unstudied and unconscious charm. The central figure was an absolute portrait, Lilian, herself a miniature, and the whole composition, with no loss of breath, was wrought to an extraordinary fineness. It was like Buonarotti's carved cherrystone, which was said to reveal the mallet hand of the master. How much love he had put into the work, only Aloysius knew. His soul had passed into it, and looking on the work of his hands when the last tender touch had been bestowed on it he was satisfied.

He had passed through those tremendous moments which are known only to the worker in the delicate and risky processes of the art of aire perdu. The precious work of so many devoted months had all been drawn away, and the mould left empty. Then came the casting in the solid gold, which was the sole medium which would content him for his gift to love. An in due time the destruction of the mold was followed by the apparation of the finished work—perfect, flawless, worked at its finest to the finger nail.

There has been a great deal of nonsense talked in this foolish world about art for art's sake, and the theory that no great work was ever done for money. Much of the finest art work the world can boast of has been done under the spur of sheer necessity, and yet with so much of fervor and affection that the money question has been clean forgotten, and when at last the hard-earned meed has been paid and the achieved work carried away, it has been like losing a dear friend to part with it. So long the darling companion of one's days and the preoccupation of the night, and now to go, to be done with, to be seen no more!

Aloysius felt this strongly. Lilian and he were parted; so far parted, as it seemed to him, that the presentation of his gift afforded him almost the last chance of meeting her. He advised her by letter of the conclusion of his work, received an appointment for its delivery, and, packing his treasure with great care, he set out with it upon a summer morning, and arriving a few minutes in advance of the hour arranged was left to wait in a lonely drawing room. Here he exposed the little group upon a center table and then sat down to wait Lilian's arrival. She came in flushed and breathless, holding out both hands to him in welcome.

"I was walking at the far end of the pleasance when Mason came to tell me you were here," she said. "I thought I had yet a quarter of an hour to wait." She drew a tiny jeweled watch from her girdle and held it toward him. "Except my aunt, who does everything by clockwork, I never knew a lady who could rely upon her own timekeeper. And the work—the magnum opus—is it here?"

He showed it by gesture, and she dropped before it on her knees and drew it toward her.

JAPAN LAND OF JUGGLERS.

Old Wizard Amuses Dinner Guests by Fooling Foreign Skeptic.

Japan is the land of jugglers and fashionable Japanese always have them at any large entertainment they give. One very clever old man goes around in a single cotton gown with two baskets full of "properties" over his shoulders, and, putting them down anywhere, performs his tricks, with the expectant audience encircling him. A hatful of coppers rewards him sufficiently and he goes on to eat fire, disgorge eggs, needles, lanterns and smoking pipes at the next place. At a recent Japanese dinner a foreign guest determined to have no optical illusions about what the jugglers did. He never allowed his glances to be distracted and was not once off his guard. Noticing this, the old juggler played to him entirely. An immense porcelain vase was brought in and set in the middle of the room and the juggler, crawling in, let himself down into it slowly. The skeptic sat for half an hour without taking his eye from the vase, which he was convinced, was sound and firm and stood on no trap door. After this prolonged watch the rest of the company assailed him with laughter and jeers, and pointed to his side, where the old juggler was seated fanning himself and had been seated for some minutes.

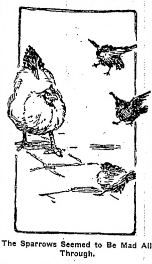
SPARROWS WHIPPED THE HEN.

Unable to Do It Alone, a Bird Flew Away and Got Help.

An awkward, long-legged old hen was picking up some cracked corn which had leaked from a passing wagon on Summit street one day last week, says the Kansas City Journal. A sparrow flew down and hopped around, eyeing the corn, but it made only a handful in the crack between two paving stones, and the hen stood almost astraddle of it and was fast gathering it in. The sparrow ventured close two or three times, and chirped impatiently and angrily, but the hen kept right on eating, and gave no attention to the sparrow. The impatient sparrow flew away, and in a minute returned with two other sparrows. The three made a combined attack upon the hen as soon as they alighted upon the pavement. They seemed to be mad all through. The feathers on the tops of their heads and necks stood up like the hair on the back of a maddened cat and they flew at the chicken, chattering and pecking at its head. The chicken did not even show fight. At the first good peck which the sparrows made it gave a squawk of pain and stalked away, and then the sparrows chattered louder than ever as they fed unmolested upon the grain.



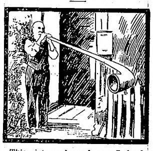
The Sparrows Seemed to Be Mad All Through.

BLIND MAN A CHAMPION.

Philadelphian Without Sight Plays Checkers Skillfully.

There is a blind man in Philadelphia who can beat you at checkers, no matter how well you play. He has defeated Pillsbury, Matthew Priest and half a dozen other professionals, despite the fact that he cannot see as much as a ray of light and has to follow the game in his mind, with the assistance of his finger tips. John Thompson is the blind champion's name. He lives at No. 251 North Warnock street, where many of the most scientific checker players in the United States have called on him and met their Waterloo. Thompson has a crude little board that was made especially for him, the squares being sunk in the wood. One set of men is square to match the holes, and has a little groove on one side. When the men have only a single value these grooves are turned downward, but when they reach the king row the grooves are turned upward. The other set of men are the usual round checkers, and with his delicate touch Thompson can distinguish between them as readily as anyone who has the full use of his eyes.—Exchange.

SUMMONS TO DINNER.



This picture shows how a Swiss hotel proprietor summons his visitors to dinner. The great advantage of the horn is that it can be heard a long way off.

The Egg of the Season.

In the window of a West end taxidermist there is now being exhibited an egg which the man in the street will doubtless attribute to the result of a more than usually prolific gooseberry season. It is the genuine product, however, of a tall, flightless bird—the sepyornis maximus—which formerly inhabited the Island of Madagascar. The eggs of this immense creature are nearly a yard in circumference and a foot in length, and their cubical contents, roughly speaking, are equal to six ostrich eggs, or 150 hens' eggs, or two gallons of water. The market price ranges from $175 to $600, only 20 known specimens being in existence.—Liverpool Courier.

Cow Gives Alms.

A curious custom still holds good in the village of Waddesdon, in Buckinghamshire, England, where on any morning or evening of the year a person can claim a free drink of new milk from a cow specially kept for the benefit of thirsty wayfarers. This animal is known locally as the "alms cow," and when she dies another has to be provided by the parish.

NERVOUS COLLAPSE

Sinking Spells, Headaches and Rheumatism all Yield to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mrs. Lizzie Williams, of No. 416 Cedar street, Quincy, Ill., says: "Ever since I had nervous prostration, about thirteen years ago, I have had periodical spells of complete exhaustion. The doctor said my nerves were shattered. Any excitement or unusual activity would throw me into a state of lifelessness. At the beginning my strength would come back in a moderate time after each attack, but the period of weakness kept lengthening until at last I would lie helpless as many as three hours at a stretch. I had dizzy feelings, palpitation of the heart, misery after eating, hot flashes, nervous headaches, rheumatic pains in the back and hips. The doctor did me so little good that I gave up his treatment, and really feared that my case was incurable

"When I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills my appetite grew keen, my food no longer distressed me, my nerves were quieted to a degree that I had not experienced for years and my strength returned. The fainting spells left me entirely after I had used the third box of the pills, and my friends say that I am looking better than I have done for the past fifteen years."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are recommended for diseases that come from impoverished blood such as anæmia, rheumatism, debility and disorders of the nerves such as neuralgia, nervous prostration and partial paralysis. They have cured the most stubborn indigestion. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills agree with the most delicate stomach, quiet all nervousness, stir up every organ to do its proper work and give strength that lasts. Sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

SPEEDY CURE OF MISS GOODE

She Is Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and Writes Gratefully to Mrs. Pinkham.

For the wonderful help that she has found Miss Cora Goode, 255 E. Chicago Avenue, Chicago, Ill., believes it her duty to write the following letter for publication, in order that other women afflicted in the same way may be benefited as she was. Miss Goode is president of the Bryn Mawr Lawn Tennis Club of Chicago. She writes;

Miss Cora Goode

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I tried many different remedies to build up my system, which had become run down from loss of proper rest and unreasonable hours, but nothing seemed to help me. Mother is a great advocate of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles, having used it herself some years ago with great success. So I began to take it, and in less than a month I was able to be out of bed and out of doors, and in three months I was entirely well. Really I have never felt so strong and well as I have since."

No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, bloating (or flatulence), displacement of organs, inflammation or ulceration, can be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Her experience is very great, and she gives the benefit of it to all who stand in need of wise counsel. She is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. Address, Lynn, Mass.

SAVED BABY LYON'S LIFE.

Awful Sight From That Dreadful Complaint, Infantile Eczema — Mother Praises Cuticura Remedies.

"Our baby had that dreadful complaint, Infantile Eczema, which afflicted him for several months, commencing at the top of his head and at last covering his whole body. His sufferings were untold and constant misery, in fact there was nothing we would not have done to have given him relief. We finally procured a whole set of Cuticura Remedies, and in about three or four days he began to show a brighter spirit and really laughed, for the first time in a year. In about ninety days he was fully recovered. Praise for the Cuticura Remedies has always been our greatest pleasure, and there is nothing too good that we could say in their favor, for they certainly saved our baby's life, for he was the most awful sight that I ever beheld prior to the treatment of the Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Maebelle Lyon, 1826 Appleton Ave., Parsons, Kan., July 18, 1905."

WOMAN'S MAGAZINE

Have Too Many "Fillers."

MISTAKE MADE IN FURNISHING THE HOME.

Overcrowded Rooms Are Not Things of Beauty—Gaudy Ornaments Out of Place and in the Way.

With the simple life New Yorkers are practicing simplicity in their house furnishings as well as in their diet. In this they are emulating a condition that has long existed in Europe. Overcrowding homes with furnishings and ornamentations had heretofore been regarded as an Americanism, so seldom are the houses of our cousins across the water thus treated. The great French salons and the prominent London drawing rooms, where wealth abides, are elegant through their simplicity. The homes of the working class are simple and gaudy ornaments are seldom seen.

Some women have absolutely false ideas of economy. This is nowhere more apparent than when they buy household furnishings.

Everything in the house that does not add something to the convenience, happiness or education of the family or some member of the family is an extravagance.

The woman who would expect her relations-in-law to fly at her with hammer and tongs if she were to buy a six dollar pair of curtains would calmly and with no thought spend that amount of money buying six vases at one dollar each merely that she might have something to set around to fill up the bare places and empty corners.

These fillers are not attractive; they never mean anything to anyone in the family; they make work, for they must be dusted and kept in place, and they make a mess of the room that might, without them, be tidy and restful to sit down in. Besides, they do cost money in the end, even though the original cost is only ten or 15 cents.

To be sure, every house needs a vase or two for flowers, but so many of the vases one sees are too fancy for use and are good for nothing but to stand upon the mantel and be dusted.

Often a really beautiful picture is not noticed because it is surrounded by a number of cheap, unattractive prints that have been hung on the walls as fillers.

Many times the beauty of a rare piece of glass is unobserved because of the fillers that are grouped about it.

It is not uncommon to see a handsome piece of furniture pushed into a corner while the room is crowded with commonplace rockers. The beauty of the good piece of furniture is lost sight of because the fillers conceal the good points.

If there is anything good in a room give it a chance. Don't spoil it with fillers.

The money spent for fillers would in time buy something really worth while, something worth having. To save money on little things to spend for big things is economy, when a house is to be furnished.—From What-to-Eat.

USEFUL CASE FOR JEWELS.

Combination of Silk and Leather the Best to Use.

This little case for jewels, made in silk, and lined with chamois leather, is distinctly a better receptable for brooches, rings, etc., than the ordinary jewel box, in which unworn articles soon tarnish. Especially useful will this contrivance be found for traveling purposes, as it takes up very little space. The center portion should be slightly padded with cotton wool, so that brooches may be easily pinned on to it. The upper and lower portions are fitted with six little pockets, with flaps of leather that fold over and button down, and in which may be carried rings, chains, and other articles. The case folds up, and is fastened together with ribbons; a glance at the sketch will explain this. Initials may be worked on the outside. Many ladies when traveling fix such a case to their corsets, or carry them in a large underpocket.

IDEAS FROM THE ORIENT.

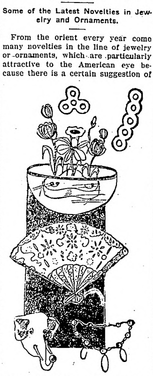
From the orient every year come many novelties in the line of jewelry or ornaments, which are particularly attractive to the American eye because there is a certain suggestion of the east about them which cannot be imitated by even the cleverest of manufacturers here. In workmanship and in material they surpass the article in the same style which is made here. A few of the latest arrivals are shown in the accompanying cut. The novel arrangement for holding lilies or flowers of any kind upright in a bowl of water is from Japan. It is made of wood, with three holes for the stems of the flowers, and it floats on the surface.



The ivory fan is made with all the exquisite workmanship that is seen on these fine ivories which come from China. The necklace, with its pendants in different lengths, is of oriental topaz, a beautiful deep yellow. The ivory elephant head is a belt buckle, with an oriental stone of peculiar green colorings on the end of the elephant's trunk.

NEW IDEAS IN EMBROIDERY.

Double Motive in Working of Designs Upon Taffeta.

Women who like to embroider can get up some very pretty designs using the new embroidered silks as patterns. One woman made up a very pretty brown taffeta in a medium shade, and upon this she marked out little circles, diamonds and arrow shaped silk of precisely the same shade as the background. It was a great deal of work, but the effect was indescribably rich.

It has been discovered by some one that the working of designs upon taffeta not only improves the general appearance of the silk, giving it a very expensive look, but it also makes the taffeta wear better, which is much in its favor. Taffeta that has been strengthened by the working of little silk figures all over it will outwear two or three times the taffeta that is made up plain. But the working of the figures certainly is tiresome, calling for lots of patience and good eyesight.

It looks just now as though brown would be worn a great deal and the shops are laying in some very handsome things in brown satin, brown taffeta, brown velvet, both light and heavy, and all the other brown fabrics, cloth, serge, ladies' cloth and broadcloth. One can do so much with brown, and it is a color that is always so ladylike and appropriate. It is hard to go wrong, in dress matters, if one clings to brown.

One of the loveliest of brown taffetas is trimmed with bands of brown cloth put on in a great plaided design around the foot of the skirt which has no other trimming. There is an embroidered circle in the middle of each square. Another brown taffeta is made with plaited skirt and apron waist. The apron waist is in suspender form and is worn over a very smart brown and red plaid silk shirtwaist. So one can see how these dresses can be varied to look very handsome and very appropriate to every occasion.

Kilt Skirts to Have Vogue.

For the woman who does not want her skirts to drag kilt skirts are desirable and they are safely the popular skirt of the season. At the same time the great dressmakers, keeping a cycle ahead of us as they always do, are making longer circular affairs which will be copied here and there by the woman who can have two or three street suits. It is always good judgment for her to choose these things for extra uses, as, once well made, they are never entirely out of style and are generally good as long as there is a rag of them left.

His Lordship's Amidship.

Ambassador Choate tells a story of the bishop of Rochester, England, the divine who was so fond of cricket that he used to play the game with an expert local team.

It appears that one day when the bishop was batting the bowler pitched very wide.

"Please keep the ball in the parish!" commanded the bishop, testily.

The next ball the bowler sent in caught the right reverend gentleman full in the waistband, whereupon the bowler observed:

"I think that's somewhere about the diocese, my lord."

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs, obtained, by an original method, from certain plants known to them to act most beneficially and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

That there is not meat in the remarks of a vegetarian.

That a contest between two women is usually a struggle for the last word.

That failure is often due to wasting time in envy over other peoples' successes.

That riches have wings and that is why thepoor are are always with us, says a wise guy.

That a woman often does things the way she sets out to do, unless you expect it of her.

That you can't surprise a woman by telling her you love her; she knows it before you do.

That there would not be so much sympathy wasted in this world if it could be converted into cash.

That there are some men who think they are public spirited not to kill a man after they have robbed him.

That when a man is in love he is either so happy or so miserable that he does not care whatever happens.

That genius is said to be about 90 per cent insanity—and the remainder depends altogether upon the brand of insanity.

That a bachelor says the reason why a girl doesn't scream when a man tries to kiss her is because somebody might hear.

That it must have been a married man who said the most annoying thing about marriage is the way it sticks to you afterward.

That it has been a strenuous campaign for county officials and no matter how the battle went they are probably all glad it is over.

That a married man may discover it doesn't cost any more to feed two people than one but it costs twenty times the amount to dress them.

That "you were not the man I thought you were" exclaimed a a Red Lake Falls woman to her husband. "No, my dear," he meekly replied, "and I am not the man I thought I was, either."

That it was at a Republican meeting at Crookston; "What my friends," volcanically demanded the speaker, "does the old party stand for?" "Well, you for one thing," was the unexpected answer from the back end of the hall.

That ambition is an excellent thing and without it the world would not progress. But there are various degrees of ambition, and that of a certain small boy doubtless furnished fun for the neighbors. This little boy had an ambition to be a letter carrier, and finding in a cedar chest in the attic a great bundle of love letters that his mother had preserved in a leather school satchel and distributed them from house to house thruout the neighborhood.

That the Adrian Democrat tells of a wedding feast where the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pleaded to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair he rose to his feet. He intended to imply that he was unprepared for speechmaking, but he unfortuuately placed his hand upon the bride's shoulder and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening and concluding words: "This-er-thing has been unexpectedly forced upon me."

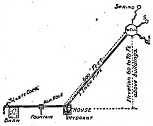
THE FARM WATER SUPPLY.

A Subject of Vital Importance to the Man Who Has a Large Dairy.

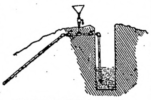
"I am thinking of gathering up some springs on hillside above my buildings and piping the water down to house and barn. I think of putting in self-watering devices for stock in barn and inside closet in house, with fountain in dooryard. About 600 feet from house I have a rise of 60 to 80 feet; at 1,000 feet would have considerably more, probably 100 feet. The supply of water is not large and I thought of collecting the water from one spring and one well, about 18 feet deep, into a reservoir, and from there conveying it to house and barn through one-inch galvanized iron pipe. In case well and spring would give out, I might drill well and put up wind wheel to pump into reservoir. How shall I go about it?"



THE WATER SYSTEM.

The above letter is from W. W. Gibson, a farmer of Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, to which the Ohio Farmer replies as follows:

A one-inch pipe under the circumstances stated will deliver from 12 to 15 gallons of water per minute With small pipes of great length, friction greatly retards the flow, and your correspondent should not use less than one-inch galvanized pipe; he would find it more satisfactory to use a one and one-half-inch pipe. Assuming that he will use a one-inch pipe, the most important question for him to decide is whether he will need a reservoir or not. If he can collect water from different springs and get a flow equal to about the amount per minute named above, he will need no reservoir.



SIPHON AT WELL ON HILL.

Dig out the lower spring and put in two lengths of 36-inch sewer pipe. Then drill through just below the joint between them and connect the iron pipe. Place a screen over entrance to pipe. If a reservoir is needed, the size of it will depend largely upon the amount of water that is available and the amount of water that will be used. It is better to have supply enough to keep water running a good portion of the time. The pipe is then less liable to become clogged, will be cooler in summer, and less liable to freeze in winter.

Run the pipe as straight as possible from spring to buildings and without any abrupt turns. Lay it at least two feet deep so that it will remain cool in summer and keep from freezing in winter. T joints should be inserted wherever water is to be taken from the main pipe line. At the fountain there may be a manhole giving access to a stop-cock to shut water off from the fountain and a gate to let water out of fountain pipe in winter so as to avoid damage from freezing.

A waste-cock is put in at the barn so that, at times, the surplus water may be allowed to escape, and thus keep up more of a flow in the pipe than might otherwise be required. No filter will be needed.

In regard to drawing water from a well 18 feet deep: It could be siphoned out, but I should avoid this if possible, as air will sometimes collect in the siphon and water stop flowing. If a siphon is put in, at the highest point should be an opening with valve in order to facilitate filling the pipe with water, to get the flow started.

For Wrapping Butter.

Only the very best pure vegetable parchment paper should be used in wrapping butter. Inferior paper encourages the growth of mold and does not protect the butter. Much of the paper used is too light in weight. A ream of 500 sheets, measuring 50x12½ inches should weigh at least 40 pounds, and the same number of sheets 38x12½ inches should weigh not less than 30 pounds.

The Rattling Farm Wagon.

If your lumber wagon rattles take off the nuts, drive out the bolts and put a leather washer under the bolt head and under the nut or washer. Tell the boys and hired man not to drive so fast when the wagon is empty.

Old-Time Methods.

Every man who has given any thought to the subject knows that old-time methods will not apply to modern conditions. Every dairyman should keep this constantly in mind.

ADVENTURES IN BRIDGEBUILDING

The riveting up of the Zambesi bridge proved to be a more formidable undertaking than had been anticipated. Several of the riveters we brought from England were unable to stand the climate, and we had to depend largely on the men in the country. We found that an average day's work in England and in Africa were two very different things. Although we had good hydrauiinc and pneumatic equipment, the rate of progress was rather slow.

An interesting incident occurred during the riveting. A leopard, which had previously devastated the henrobsts of every one in the the locality, besides taking sundry dogs and cats, was run over by an engine one night. He had apparently been dazzled by the headlight and had lain on the track. He was seen by the driver, who pulled up. The skin was found to be scarcely damaged.

The deep pools among the islands in the river were the haunt of numerous hippopotami, which, although peaceable most of the year, if left alone, at certain times became dangerous. We were chased on one or two occasions when in Canadian canoes, but never came to grief. Others were not so fortunate. Three canoes were overturned in one week. In one case one of the civil commissioners' native paddlers was drowned. In another, the man overturned lost his rifle and other gear and had to swim to one of the islands, where he remained all night.

Another adventure that befell two of our riveters, is, perhaps, worth recording. They went a little way along the gorge and there found the remains of a red buck. They started to cut out the horns. Suddenly they heard a growd behind them. Turning, they saw a lioness with two cubs, who was evidently annoyed at this interference with her dinner. The two men did not stop to argue, but made a bee line for the gorge, down which they jumped—about as dangerous a proceeding, one would think, as facing the lion. Luckily they stopped sliding a good way down, and returned very much bruised and excited. The lioness was followed next day for some distance, but the party was unable to come up with her.—World's Work.

AS IN THE MELODRAMA.

Police Chief's Story of Two Disguises and an Arrest.

"A man and a woman," said the police chief, "occupied a compartment of a Pullman. In a desolate place, the train speeding like lightning, the man said to the woman:

"'Madam, I will ask you to look out of the window a few minutes. I am going to make some changes in my apparel.'

"'Certainly, sir,' said the woman politely.

"Two or three minutes, filled with odd, rustling noises, passed. The man said:

"'Now, madam, I am finished.'

"She looked at him and, behold, he had transformed himself into a dashing girl, heavily veiled, fashionably dressed and with rich and beautiful blond hair.

"Some moments later, in her turn, the lady said:

"'Now, sir, or madam, whichever you are, I'll ask you also to look out of the window. I have some changes to make in my own dress.'

"The other complied and, when he was permitted to withdraw his gaze from the passing landscape, what was his surprise to find the lady changed into a man. He gave a loud laugh.

"'It seems,' he said, 'that we are both fugitives. Hence we should be pals. I am a bank robber. What are you?'

"'I,' said the other, 'am Detective Hawke of San Francisco, and for three days, in female attire, I have been shadowing you. Wrists together, please, so that I may now slip the nippers on.'

"Thus," concluded the police chief, "did my friend Hawke arrest the notorious Jack Graeme in '79. It was the neatest arrest, from the melodramatic standpoint, of the year."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Old Bullion's Arrogance.

"Benton was a most remarkable man," said the late Col. Switzler. "In some respects the most remarkable I have ever known, but he could not begin a careet at this time. The people would not tolerate him. He would impress even a stranger by his appearance. He walked as if he owned the earth. With head raised at an angle of 45 degrees and hands behind his back he would stalk with measured tread down the street, looking neither to the right nor to the left, recognizing no one.

"If he had an appointment to speak at 2 o'clock, promptly at 2 o'clock he would arrive. He would come in his carriage unattended. He would permit no one to introduce him. But, passing through the crowd, he would make his way to the rostrum and begin, 'Citizens.' Never did he say 'Fellow citizens.' Those before him were no fellows of his. And when he had concluded he would make his way back to the hotel, without personally addressing a soul in his audience. No one dared interrupt him in his speech. He refused to recognize the right of any constituent to ask him how he stood on any subject."—Columbia Herald.

CATARRH BLOOD DISEASED AND SYSTEM DISORDERED

Catarrh is not merely an inflammation of the tissues of the head and throat, as the symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, mucous dropping back into the throat, continual hawking and spitting, etc., would seem to indicate; it is a blood disease in which the entire circulation and the greater part of the system are involved. Catarrh is due to the presence of an excess of uric acid in the blood. The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels frequently become torpid and dull in their action and instead of carrying off the refuse and waste of the body, leave it to sour and form uric acid in the system. This is taken up by the blood and through its circulation distributed to all parts of the system. These impurities in the blood irritate and inflame the different membranes and tissues of the body, and the contracting of a cold will start the secretions and other disgusting and disagreeable symptoms of Catarrh. As the blood goes to all parts of the body the catarrhal poison affects all parts of the system. The head has a tight, full feeling, nose continually stopped up, pains above the eyes, slight fever comes and goes, the stomach is upset and the entire system disordered and affected by this disease. It is a waste of time to try to cure Catarrh with sprays, washes, inhalations, etc. Such treatment does not reach the blood, and can, therefore, do nothing more than temporarily relieve the discomfort of the trouble. To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be thoroughly purified and the system cleansed of all poisons, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its head, goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal poison from the blood, making this vital stream pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, the head is loosened and cleared, the hawking and spitting cease, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and vigorous health restored. S. S. S. also tones up the stomach and digestion and acts as a fine tonic to the entire system. If you are suffering with Catarrh begin the use of S. S. S. and write us a statement of your case and our physicians will send you literature about Catarrh, and give you special medical advice without charge. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I had Catarrh for about fifteen years, and no man could have been worse. I tried everything I could hear of, but no good resulted. I then began S. S. S., and could see a little improvement from the first bottle, and after taking it a short while was cured. This was six years ago, and I am as well today as any man. I think Catarrh is a blood disease, and know there is nothing on earth better for the blood than S. S. S. Nobody thinks more of S. S. S. than I do. M. MATSON, Lapeer, Mich.

GOVERNOR ISSUES PROCLAMATION

In accordance with law and custom, Governor Johnson Saturday issued his annual Thanksgiving proclamation, setting aside November 29th as a day of general thanksgiving. His proclamation is as follows:

"The shortened day, a wind-blown leaf, an air crisp with the twang of the coming of the frost king, these remind us of the near approach of winter and the passing of another year.

"The past twelve months havebeen remarkably prosperous ones for the American people. In material prosperity no nation approaches ours in its enjoyment; in the renewal of the faith of our fathers, typified in the demand for the highest type of public service, we are still more to be congratulated. The year has been rich in blessings. On every hand in the bountiful Northwest there is peace and plenty. Poverty, through press of circumstances, will always exist, but the great mass of our people, provided as they are with employment that yields a fair return for the labor performed, are prosperous almost to the point of affluence.

"That their better natures have not been lulled into forgetfullness of the higher things by the outpourings of the horn of plenty, is significant of the new dispensation. On the contrary, the nation has experienced an awakening of the public conscience that has penetrated to our fartherest borders and quickened the entire body politic.

"Recognizing our blessings and remembering, too, that our own fair state of Minnesota has been notably free from any public calamity expressed in fire or flood, famine or pestilence, or other cataclysm of nature, it is not our only privilege, but our duty to give thanks to our Heavenly Father, the giver of all good things and the father of all our good things.

"As an evidence of our gratitude, and in conformity to usage and the precedent established by our New England fathers and continued by the presidents of the United States, I, John A. Johnson, governor of the state of Minnesota, do hereby proclaim Thursday, Nov. 29th, A. D., 1906, as a day of general thanksgiving. Upon that day let the people assemble in their customary places of worship and participate in such services as will indicate the gratitude in their hearts for the manifold blessings of the past, and let them devoutly pray for the continuance of divine mercy in the future. Around the hearthstone and at the family alter let the bounty of God be the topic of thought."

The Sportsnan's Delight.

Maine is today the paradise of the sportsman. Rigidly enforced game laws kept up her stock of salmon, trout, deer, moose, etc. In fact, the deer during the closed season are very annoying to the farmer, often playing sad havoc with his crop. Maine is very watchful over these fish and game recources, for the visiting tourists and hunters leave $5,500,000 with guides, hotelkeepers and camp proprietors every year. To be able to enjoy a good hunting and fishing trip, a man should drink golden grain belt beer. This beverage is pure, wholesome and nourishing and is the guide post to a long happy life. SHOOTING MAN FOR DEER MANSLAUGHTFR

The Man Who Doesn't Know the Difference Shouldn't Be Allowed to Hunt.

There has been considerable comment of late as to whether any proceeding at law could be taken for the prosecution of the individual who, in his haste to discharge firearms, kills a fellow being while mistaking him for a deer or other animal. This comment was considerably aggravated by a recent unfortunate occurence near Blackduck, whereby Simon Paullis was mistaken for a deer and ruthlessly slain. Many have beleived that there is no law for these kind of cases.

The big game season is on and the north woods of Beltrami and Itasca counties will be filled with hunters from every part of the state and also outside states. A large majority of there men are exceedingly careless with the long range rifles they are in the habit of carrying and someone is very liable to be killed through mistake. For such carelessness the following law was passed by the last legislature, whereby it is made manslaughter in the first degree:

Section I. That Sec. 6445 of the General Statutes of 1894, being Sec. 160 of the penal code of this state, be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Section 6445. Same—In the first degree.

Such homicide is manslaughter in the first degree when committed without a design to effect death either

1. By a person engaged in comitting or attempting to commit a misdemeanor, affecting the person or property, either of the person killed, or another; or
2. In the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon;
3. By shooting another with a gun or other firearm, when resulting from carelessness in mistaking the person shot for a deer or other animal."

Newspapers As Givers.

In the course of a recent address in the Unitarian Church, in Madison, Wis., Amos [illegible] Wilder, [illegible] of the Wisco[illegible] said:

Newspapers a[illegible] the communit[illegible] much money to good cau[illegible] to a newspaper space is money. The average citizen is interested in one good thing—a hospital meeting or a church supper or the humane society.

The newspaper is bolstering up a half a dozen projects daily. It is sometimes said:

Why, these topics are news—it is to read about them that people subscribe to the paper. It is true enough that these topics have certain news value, but a few lines soon exhaust that. From the standpoint of public interest it is enough to know once that the humane society will meet Tuesday, or the second ward Loyal Legion will hold a concert.

"A handful of people may be interested to have the announcement dinned into their ears daily until the fatal day, but a newspaper is published for thousands of people. Its space is limited and it costs money to set type.

"No one knows what immense free service newspapers give to these countless good causes, and how many journals have been bankrupted because the owner did not refuse (as citizens decline to give more than a certain amount of money) to turn newspapers over to charity instead of to news, which the average readers want. There must be a choice section of Paradise reserved for this underestimated profession which so loves its fellow man."

CARRIED SIX COUNTIES

Cole Got the Six While Johnson Had Seventy-Seven.

A. L. Cole carried six Minnesota counties, while Governor Johnson received pluralities in each of the other seventy seven. Johnson carried every county in the third, fourth, fifth, seventh and ninth districts. Cole carried Houston in the first, Faribault and Jackson in the second, both by small pluralities, Cass and Hubbard in the sixth, and Cook in the eighth.

Itasca county went for Johnson by about 400, according to A. B. Clair of Grand Rapids who reported at democratic state headquarters today. He says there are about fifteen small outlying precincts to hear from, which will not materially change the result. Cook county's official vote was received from Grand Marais, on the north shore of Lake Superior. It cast 139 for Cole and 126 for Johnson.

Governor Johnson's plurality is now exceeding 70,000, with the probability that complete returns will increase instead of diminishing it.

The wide open tax amendment is running better. With forty counties reporting, the amendment has [illegible] out of a total of [illegible]7,478 [illegible] than 4500 [illegible] [illegible] told certai[illegible] [illegible] in [illegible]d Ramsey.—Journal.

IGNORES THANKSGIVING

New Code Forgets that It Is a Legal Holiday.

The new code does not mention Thanksgiving day as a legal holiday. For some unknown reason drafters of the code failed to take notice that this day has always been considered a holiday.

A number of inquiries have been received in the office of the state superintendent of public instruction asking the superintendent whether Thandsgiving is to be a legal holiday under the new law. The majority of the queries have enamated from school officers in various parts of the state.

The department will probably issue a statement that as long as the governor annually makes a proclamation declaring the last Thursday in November Thanksgiving day, and the president also appoints a certain day for "giving thanks," that the department would notify all those who have inquired that Thanksgiving is still a holiday under the new code, as it was before the publication of the revised laws.

JOHNSON OVER 50,000 IN LEAD

COMPLETE RETURNS MAY INCREASE GOVERNOR'S MAJORITY TO 60,000.

M'CLEARY LOSES IN SECOND

HAMMOND ELECTED TO CONGRESS BY SAFE MARGIN—THE LEGISLATURE.

St. Paul, Nov. 9. — Gov. Johnson's plurality will probably be near 50,000. His committee yesterday afternoon made an estimate by counties by which they gave him 57,675. They claimed that their figures were conservative

The complete returns received from a number of counties and nearly complete returns from many more would indicate that when the figures are complete Johnson's majority will be over 50,000.

Cole apparently will carry only half a dozen counties. He carries Cass, his home county, easily, and Jackson county by a fair majority. Complete returns also give him Houston and Faribault, and nearly complete returns give him Hubbard by about 100.

State Ticket.

The election of all the other Republican candidates is assured by majorities running from 25,000 to 60,000. S. G. Iverson and E. T. Young are running close together, with Iverson a little to the good. C. C. Dinehart will come next, possibly 5,000 behind them. Schmahl will come next, perhaps 5,000 below Dinehart. Staples and Pidgeon will run about equal, and not far below Schmahl. Eberhardt will get the smallest vote, but it will not be cut so bady as first returns indicated. Two reasons are given for his low vote. L. G. Pendergast, his opponent, was an old soldier. Also, there was an evident tendency to let the second man on the ticket suffer with the head of ticket. The following is the vote by counties, and the 1904 vote:

Democrats Gain in Legislature.

The Republicans will lose eight members of the next state senate and five or six members of the house. The Republicans will probably have all except nineteen of the senators and all except sixteen of the representatives. Last year there were eleven Democratic senators. This year there will probably be eighteen Democrats and one Populist. Last year the Democrats had eleven representatives; this year it looks as if they would have fourteen and the Prohibitionists two.

Democratic senators were elected in the Second, Fourth, Eighth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twenty-first, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth, Thirtieth, Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-eighth, Forty-seventh, Fifty-fourth and Fifty-sixth. A Populist senator was elected in the Fifty-ninth.

Several Republican senators were defeated for re-election, including A. B. Kelly, C. A. Benson, G. W. Peachey and E. B. Colester.

The Democrats elected representatives in the Second, Thirteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-sixth, Thirtieth, three in the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth, Thirty-eighth and Fifty-fourth districts. The Prohibitionists elected representatives in the Ninth and Forty-fourth districts.

Hammond Defeats McCleary.

W. S. Hammond of St. James has defeated J. T. McCleary for congress in the Second district. Hammond's majority will be in the neighborhood of 1,000.

Congressman McCleary yesterday conceded his defeat by W. S. Hammond, and last evening sent the following telegram to Mr. Hammond at St. James:

"The returns indicate your election to congress. As a personal friend, accept my congratulations."

The following table of majorities is based on complete returns from some of the counties and Hammond's estimate based on nearly complete returns from the other counties. This table gives Hammond a majority of 1,251, but this probably will be cut down Following is the vote by counties:

*Hammond's estimate.

In the First district Tawney's majority will be about 4,000.

Lindbergh carries the Sixth by about 3,500.

Steven's plurality in the Fourth is about 8,500.

Frank M. Nye has a good margin in the Fifth.

Davis (Third), Volstead (Seventh), Bede (Eighth) and Steenerson (Ninth) were all re-elected.

IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Republican Majority of 42,000 Is Estimated.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 9.—Coe I. Crawford, Republican candidate for governor, and the congressional and state tickets have a majority of 25,750 in htirty-nine of the fifty-two counties in South Dakota. Figures from the remaining counties are yet indefinite, but indicate that the Republican majority in the state will reach not less than 42,000.

The Republicans, with four legislative districts to hear from, have elected thirty-six members of the state senate and the Democrats nine members. Of the members of the lower branch of the legislature, the Republicans have elected seventy-six, the Democrats eight. Thus the Republicans on joint ballot, when a successor to United States Senator Gamble is elected next January, will have at least 112 of the total of 133 members who will be entitled to seats.

BURKE AND FISK.

NORTH DAKOTA DEMOCRATS ELECT GOVERNOR AND JUDGE OF SUPREME COURT.

ALL OTHER PLACES ON STATE TICKET ARE CLAIMED BY REPUBLICANS.

North Dakota's next governor will be a democrat, and his name is John Burke. From the best authenticated reports possible to be obtained up to a late hour Wednesday afternoon, those about the state republican headquarters at Fargo concede Burke's election by a safe majority, the eastern and northern counties having gone to him solidly, with the exception of Cass and perhaps Williams. Along the Red River Valley, Cass is the only county which gave a majority to Sarles, his home county of Traill being among those which joined the landslide to Burke. With the exception of Richland and Barnes, however, all counties along the Northern Pacific main line and southward in the state appear to have given Sarles good majorities. Of the east central counties substantially all, including Ramsey, Nelson, Wells, Eddy, Foster, Steele and Griggs, fell into the democratical gubernatorial column, while the central counties westward of these have all lined up for the present governor. From returns at hand the republicans believe Burke's majority may not much exceed 2,000 to 2,500, although it is confidently claimed by Chairman Cashel at Grafton as not under 10,000.

A still greater defection from North Dakota's usual republican vote is found in the returns upon member of the state supreme court, for which position Fisk, district judge at Grand Forks, is the successful candidate against Atty. John Knauf of Jamestown. Judge Fisk's majority is conceded in republican circles as between the five and seven thousand marks, and it is believed by many that it may run much higher. The majorities on this office, while varying greatly from the majorities in same counties for governor, give Fisk the lead in the same counties carried by Burke, with the addition of Cass and Stutsman, which also polled majorities for the Grand Forks jurist. Like Governor Sarles, Knauf is reported as having come out of his home county with a majority against him. This was partly made up, however, by unusual strength developed by him in the western counties.

For other nominees on the republican state ticket, Chairman Hanna feels assured there will be safe majorities throughout, though the democratic committeemen claim some probability of having defeated Blaisdell for secretary of state, Peterson for treasurer and R. S. Lewis for lieutenant governor. There will be little difference between the votes polled by different candidates on the republican ticket with the exception of Sarles and Knauf, and the committee believes, the average republican majorities will be about 6,000. Owing to the slow return of the count it is impossible yet to give detailed majorities for other than those upon whom the principal fight was made, at the head of their respective tickets. Estimated or complete returns upon these candidates show the following apparent majorities by counties:

ALL EXCEPT HEARST ELECTED

CHANLER AND REST OF DEMOCRATIC TICKET WIN IN NEW YORK.

New York, Nov. 10.—With the official vote of three counties missing, Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler apparently is elected lieutenant governor on the Democratic-Independence league ticket by a plurality approximating 1,700 votes over M. Linn Bruce (Rep.). To arrive at these figures Bruce's probable pluralities in the counties of Essex, Ontario and Niagara are based on the vote for the Republican gubernatorial candidate. Fulton county is also missing, excepting a statement of Bruce's plurality over Chanler. While slight changes may be made in the returns from several counties, it is not believed they will materially reduce Chanler's lead, but, on the contrary, increase it.

It appears that all the other candidates on the Democratic state ticket except governor are elected by small pluralities.

HUGHES DEFEATS HEARST BY 50,000

RURAL DISTRICTS OF NEW YORK BRING ABOUT REPUBLICAN VICTORY.

RESULTS IN OTHER STATES

NO GREAT SURPRISES SHOWN IN RETURNS—CONGRESS IS REPUBLICAN.

Elections were held Tuesday in all states, and while the results in a number of instances were of unusual interest, it may be said that, generally speaking, there were no surprises.

Throughout the South the Democratic state and congressional tickets have been elected by the usual majorities. In the West and East the states that were aligned two years ago in the Democratic or Republican column show no material change, the Democrats making gains in some instances and the Republicans in others. The Republicans retain control of congress by a good majority.

Hughes Defeats Hearst.

Perhaps the widest general interest in the elections centered in the remarkable fight for governor which has been waged in New York state between Charles E. Hughes, the Republican candidate, who throughout the campaign has had the support of President Roosevelt, and William Randolph Hearst, who has been running as the regular Democratic and Independence league nominee. The latest returns available show that Mr. Hughes, while losing nearly all of the principal cities of the state was successful by about 52,000 plurality. The rural districts brought about the Republican victory.

The indications are that the state legislature will show but little change in its political make-up.

In Chicago it is estimated that the Independence league ticket polled 40,000, but there was a Republican plurality for state officers.

Democrats Win in Oklahom.a

The constitution of the new state of Oklahoma will be written by Democrats. The Indians voted the Democratic ticket almost solidly. Oklahoma also went strongly Democratic in choosing delegates to the constitutional convention.

New Mexico voted favorably and Arizona unfavorably to enter the Union jointly as a single state, which defeats the proposition.

Congressman Nicholas Longworth was re-elected in Cincinnati.

Wadsworth and Babcock Lose.

Congressman J. W. Wadsworth, for many years chairman of the house committee on agriculture at Washington, was defeated in the Thirty-fourth New York district.

The Republicans carry Utah, Wyoming and Washington.

Results in Other States.

In California the returns from the interior of the state are coming in very slowly and it is yet impossible to give exact figures. The Republican state central committee claims that Gillett has been elected governor by at least 10,000 plurality. At Democratic headquarters this claim is not admitted. The entire congressional delegation of eight will be Republican. The legislature will be very strongly Republican.

A political landslide the like of which Montana never experienced before has swept over the state, upsetting all calculations. Charles N. Pray and Henry C. Smith, Republican candidates for congress and associate justice, the only two state offices voted for, have carried every county in the state except two. The Republicans have captured the legislature.

In Kansas the re-election of Gov. E. W. Hoch (Rep.) seems reasonably certain, although the Democratic committee still claims the state for William A. Harris by a plurality of 3,300.

In Iowa, A. B. Cummins (Rep.) will receive at least 20,000 plurality for governor. Two of Iowa's congressmen will be Democratic. The next legislature will be Republican.

From nearly complete returns from all counties in Missouri the Democrats have carried the state by a plurality of 7,640, electing all candidate on the state ticket and twelve out of the sixteen congressmen.

Indiana went about 30,000 Republican. The Democrats gained two congressmen. The Republicans carried nine congressmen and the Democrats four. The legislature will be Republican on joint ballot by about thirty.

The contest for the governorship of New Hampshire will have to be settled in the legislature, the Republican candidate, Charles M. Floyd, having failed to secure a majority over the other two candidates.

The complete returns in West Virginia increase the size of the Republican victory. The congressional districts all went Republican. The legislature is Republican.

Sufficient returns have been received in Colorado to make certain the election of the entire Republican state ticket and of sixty to seventy of the 180 members of the legislature, insuring the election of a Republican to succeed Senator Patterson.

In Rhode Island James H. Higgins Democratic candidate for governor, has a plurality of 1,238. The Republicans elected the other members of their ticket. Congressmen D. L. B Granger and Adin B. Capron (Rep.) were re-elected. The legislature is Republican.

Gov. Goofling (Rep.), candidate for re-election in Idaho, has carried the state by a majority of about 7,000. The legislature is Republican and will elect

Complete returns from sixty-one of the sixty-seven counties in Pensylvania and careful estimates from the other six counties give Edwin S. Stuart, Republican candidate for governor, a plurality of 52,533.

Democrats Gain in Congress.

Latest returns show that the Republicans have elected 223 congressmen and the Democrats 163. The Democrats lost 3 and gained 31 congressmen, as follows: Illinois 5, Indiana 3, Iowa 1, Maryland 1, Minnesota 1, Missouri 6, Nebraska 1, New Jersey 3, new York 1, North Carolina 1, Ohio 3, Pennsylvania 5. Republicans gained 1 each in Maryland, Kentucky and West Virginia, making the net Democratic gain 28.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Republicans Elect State Ticket—Congressional Delegation Unchanged.

The Republicans after a short but spirited campaign were victors in the state election, Gov. Guild being re-elected by a considerably increased plurality over last year, while his opponent, District Attorney John B. Moran of Boston, the candidate of the Democratic and Prohibition parties and Independence league, received a somewhat larger vote than that given the Democratic candidates a year ago.

The Massachusetts delegation in congress will remain practically the same.

Michigan.

Gov. Warner and the entire Republican state ticket have been elected by 60,000 to 100,000 majority. The Republican congressional candidates in each of the twelve Michigan districts have been elected, and the Republicans will have a large majority in the state legislature, with a possibility of its entire membership.

Tennessee.

Returns indicate a majority of 25,000 for Malcolm R. Patterson, Democrat, over H. Clay Evans, Republican. The legislative returns are overwhelmingly Democratic. In the First and Second congressional districts Republicans are elected. All other districts except the Eighth, which is doubtful, report Democrats elected.

Delaware.

Republicans have carried Delaware and elected Burton for congress over Marvel, Democrat. They will also control the state legislature that will elect a successor to Senator Allen, Republican. A vote was taken on the initiative and referendum. It was not opposed to any extent and will be adopted.

Connecticut.

With but a single town missing, Woodruff, the Republican candidate for governor, has a plurality of 20,704 votes over Thayer, Democrat. All Republican congressmen were elected.

Georgia.

The only election contest in Georgia was in the First congressional district. Edwards, Democrat, was elected by a plurality of about 4,000. The Democrats carried everything.

Washington.

All indications point to an overwhelming Republican victory in the state of Washington. All Republican congressmen will be returned. Legislature strongly Republican.

Utah.

The Republicans in Utah have elected their state ticket by the usual plurality, returning Joseph Howell to congress.

Wyoming.

The entire Republican ticket, headed by Gov. Brooks, has been elected by majorities of not less than 2,000.

Mississippi.

The election passed off without incident. The Democratic candidates were without opposition.

Arkansas.

The Democratic candidates for congress were elected in every district. The vote was light.

Taylor was killed while wrestling with Ryan on the floor. Wonderly may recover, though his injuries are serious.

North Dakota Farmer Lies Flat on Face and Lets Flames Burn Him.

Dickinson, N. D., Nov. 4.—William Tews, a German farmer living in the vicinity of Chalk Buttes, had a thrilling experience in a prairie fire which started near the buttes and was carried rapidly southward by a high wind. Tews was plowing in a field when he noticed the approach of the fire and immediately undertook to save his farm property by back-firing.

Just as he started the second fire the wind veered suddenly and he found himself completely surrounded by flames. There was no possible way to break through the encircling ring of fire, so Tews threw himself face downward upon the ground and the fire rushed over his body. FALSE CLAIMS IN PROSPECTUS

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 6.—Testimony taken at the Head of the Lakes before Harry H. Lemont, special commissioner appointed by the supreme court of New York state, in behalf of the plaintiq in the case of Joseph R. Megrue of New York city against Thomas A. McIntyre of the United States Flour Milling company fame and his associates, to recover $60,000, has produced some startling developments, according to John M. Gardner of New York, attorney for Mr. Megrue.

It is eproved, he says, that the promoters of the United States Flour Milling company grossly misrepresented the earning capacity of the mills at Duluth and Superior in their prospectus that was sent out to bond buyers.

Seven Located in Duluth.

Seven of the nineteen mills in the combination are located in Duluth. Mr. Gardner says:

"It has been found that certain good years had been selected and averaged, leaving out entirely in most cases the years showing losses. If the same method was applied to the other twelve mills situated at Minneapolis, Buffalo, Syracuse and New York, and which we shall investigate, profits will disappear. It looks as if it will be disclosed that the net profits per annum, instead of being enough to pay interest on bonds and dividends on preferred and common stock, as was promised in the prospectus, will disappear altogether.

Albert Schmidt, residing in the township of Oshawa, has been notified of a legacy that has fallen to him through the death of a relative in Germany. The inheritanec, however, is not making him particularly happy, for he has been advised that his share will amount to only $1.50. As the expense connected with collecting the money would amount to at least $25, he has determined to present the legacy to the imperial government.

The total receipts of iron ore at Two Harbors the past week were 236,300 tons, or an average of 39,300 tons a day. Three cargoes of coal were received, the steamers being the Matoa, A. B. Wolvin and German. Four vessels left this port with cargoes of lumber as follows: The barge R. L. Fryer, with 800,000 feet; the steamer Bradley, with 750,000 feet; the barge Genoa and barge Our Son, with a combined cargo of 1,600,000 feet

BINDING OUR OWN HANDS.

James J. Hill says there is no more reason why this country should dread Canada in unprotected business competition than there is why North Dakota should fear Pennsylvania, and no more reason why Canada and the United States should be separated by a tariff wall than there is why one state should be separated from another by such a partition.

The need of less restrictions upon the trade between this country and Canada is felt very strongly, and while Mr. Hill's plan to do away with the tariff altogether will probably stand little show of being generally accepted soon, there is hope that some reciprocal arrangement that will be to the mutual advantage of both countries may be brought about if the standpatters can be made to receive reason.

Canada has coal that we could use in our business, but we can't get it because of the tariff. Our coal is closely held, and prices are arbitrarily fixed without reference to the value of the product. American coal can be bought across the line cheaper than it can in this country. If there were no tariff on coal, Canada could ship her coal to this country and compete with the American coal trust, to the great relief of consumers.

To use another example, Canada has pulpwood and lumber, and the tariff we have imposed to shut them out is simply an implement that brings about our own undoing. Our lumber and our pulpwood are closely held, and the prices we pay for them are enormous.

As Mr. Hill said in his Chicago speech Saturday night, "if the time is not ripe for absolute free trade, the least that it demands is ample reciprocity. There cannot be a beginning until we have fixed in our minds the desirability of free interchange of natural products and raw materials, giving to the New England manufacturer his fuel and to the farmer of the western plain his lumber, and to the makers of books and newspapers everywhere their print paper free from the exactions that a needless tariff, now permits monopoly to impose."

Can anybody figure out a reason why this country, squirming under the exactions of the coal trust, the lumber trust and the paper trust, should voluntarily keep up the tariff schedules that prohibit relief from nearby supplies of coal, lumber and pulpwood in Canada?

We have no competition at home because these necessities are held by monopolies that charge us as much as they think we can possibly stand.

We have no competition from abroad because the tariff shuts it out.

Either we must destroy these monopolies, or we must let down the tariff bars and admit foreign competition to free them to give fair play.

And competition from Canada, a neighbor so close that it is almost the same as a sister state, should be invited, not barred out by aggravating and feud-creating tariff schedules.—Duluth Herald.

The latest figures give Governor Johnson a lead of over 72,000.

The Minneaqolis Journal says "somebody please stop John A. Johnson." What for? The people will probably keep on voting for him just as long as they read the Journal.

With this issue of the Courier the management of the past several months ceases any further connection with the paper. Arrangements for its further conduct are not known beyond that the management reverts to John E. King.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Sections of Law Under New Code Covering the Same.

Owing to a number of inquiries relative to compulsory education, the Courier gives the law covering it, as follows:

Section 1445. Children to be sent to school—Everyperson having under his control a child between the ages of eight and sixteen years shall send him to some school in which the common English branches are taught during the entire time the public schools of the district in which he lives are taught, unless such attendance is excused in whole or in part by the school board or board of education of such district, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 1446. Excusing attendance—Such board may excuse such attendance when satisfied—

1. That the child is in such bodily or mental condition as to prevent his attendance at school or application to study for the period required
2. That he is properly taught at home or elsewhere in the common branches.
3. That he has already aquired such branches.
4. That he is engaged in some useful occupation.
5. That there is no public school within reasonable distance of his residence.
6. That such person is unable on account of poverty, to properly clothe such child.

Article 4 of section 1446 gives the law so wide a scope that it practically deprives the school board of power to compel attendance of children after such children have attained an age where they are able to follow any kind of "useful occupation."

CHAMPIONS TO GET CUP

Organization of Football Association Among Valley High Schools.

A movement has been started to organize the high schools thruout the valley for a football tournament to be held every fall, to which every town in the Red River Valley on the Minnesota side will be eligible to have a team, and every school putting a team in the field will be entitled to a delegate to meetings which will be held for the purpose fixing rules, deciding on the qualifications necessary for individual players and to control the players, etc. Among the towns which would be eligible to have teams in this conferance would be: Ada, East Grand Forks, Hallock, Warren, Argyle, Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls, Fertile, Crookston, Fosston, Moorhead and several others. Mc Intosh will probably have a high school team next year and they would be eligible to play.

Of course it is too late to do anything with the matter this year, but it will be taken up next summer just before the opening of school and every school in the valley will be invited to enter. Lovers of sport should be pleased to see football put on an organzed basis throughout the valley and there is no reason why the plan as outlined by Mr. Morley would not be perfectly feasible. He states that a cup will be provided that will be worth the time and effort which any team in the valley can put forth to secure, and the winners will be the undisputed champions of the Red River Valley. Such a plan would put the faculties of the various schools in direct control of the game at every stage, and in such a game as football this is just what is needed, and the members of the faculties of each school in the valley should, and undoubtedly would, be in favor of such a plan.—Times.

I am sixty years old and an old soldier, and have been examined by the Government Board over fifteen times, and they said there was no cure for me. I have taken all kinds of medicine and have spent large sums of money for doctors, without avail. A short time ago I decided to try the Cuticura Remedies, and after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap, two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, two treatments in all, I am now well and completely cured. The Ideal Family Laxative.

Is one that can be used by the entire family, young and old, weak and strong, without any danger of harmful effects. It should have properties which insure the same dose always having the same effect, otherwise the quantity will have to be increased and finally lose its effect altogether. These properties can be found in that old family remedy, Brandreth's Pills, because its ingredients are of the purest herbal extracts, and every pill is kept for three years before being sold, which allows them to mellow. We do not believe there is a laxative on the market that is so carefully made.

Brandreth's Pills are the same fine laxative tonic pills your grandparents used. They have been in use for over a century and are for sale everywhere, either plain or sugar-coated.

CHAPTER XIX—(Continued.)

"Oh, how lovely!" she cried. "How exquisite! Why, it's like a jewel! how finished! And, oh, the poise of it, and the life of it. The children are adorable. How can I thank you?"

"You more than pay me in accepting it, dear," said he. "I have found the greatest pleasure of my life in working at it, and if you think it worthy—why, you crown me."

"Worthy!" cried Lilian; "it is worthy of a queen, an empress. It might be a gift from the patron saint of sculpture, whoever he may be, to Minerva. But how heavy it is for such a seeming trifle. Is it—is it gold, Aloysius?"

"Yes," said Aloysius; "it is gold, with just enough alloy to make it durable. I am glad you like it."

"Like it!" she said in a half inward whisper. "It is the most beautiful and perfect thing I have ever seen. I shall hoard it as if it were the great emerald of Kandahar. It will be my most treasured possession all my life."

"Ah!" Aloysius answered, with his rare smile; "I hope not that. Art is good, but there are better things than art."

A rap sounded at the door, and a grave manservant announced Mr. Alexis Brangwyn. The new comer walked confidently into the room and paused suddenly. Lilian sprang from her knees, and, darting toward him, seized him by the arm and drew him to the table on which the miniature group was placed.

"Look!" she cried. "Look at this, Alexis. You will see it more learnedly than I can, but you can't admire it more."

Alexis bent over it, and walked round it, scrutinizing it on this side and on that, dropping on one knee now and then to get a better point of view, and now retiring from it, and now advancing toward it.

"A marvel!" he said at last. "A bit of pure genius. Your work, Aloysius?"

"Yes," said Aloysius. "My work, and Miss Lee's property."

She noticed in some surprise that no greeting passed between them, and that they stood aloof from one another. She saw that each of them was pale, and she felt that for some cause or another this unexpected encounter was embarrassing and unwelcome to them both. She was as far from the plague of self-consciousness as a woman of her years could be, but she could scarcely fail to suppose herself the cause. The one man was her affianced husband, and the other her declared lover still, though he had long since retired from active rivalry. She had welcomed Alexis rather less because she loved him than because he had seemed to provide a refuge from a strange fascination for his rival of which she had always been half-afraid. She liked Alexis dearly, but she had never loved him, as she knew she might have loved that somber cousin of his, if only there had not been somehow a fear in her heart, perhaps of loving too profoundly. That he and his welfare and happiness were and would always be of the deepest interest to her she knew and owned, and deep down in the complex recesses of that woman's heart which vexed her with insoluble guesses she knew that if she had surrendered herself to love and to be loved by him it would have been a surrender for eternity.

Aloysius had walked to the window, and stood looking out on the garden and mechanically stroking his mustache. His attitude was altogether rigid and unbending. Alexis fidgeted about the table in an obviously feigned examination of his cousin's handiwork.. Lilian stood uncertainly between them with a pang in her heart. Was it indeed she—she asked herself—whose influence had sundered these who were once so close together? The tears crept into her lovely eyes, and moving toward Aloysius she laid a timid hand upon his arm. He turned and, meeting her gaze, saw the bright drops just ready to brim over.

"Dear," she whispered, "be friends again for my sake."

She had seen him sometimes when he had not dreamed that any eye was upon him, and had discerned upon his face the expression of his saddest mood. But she had seen nothing like the melancholy which lay upon him now. There was more than distress in that strange look. A great yearning and pity were in it, but he said no word, and made no gesture save to raise his hand and lay it gently on her head, once, twice, and thrice. Then with an unchanging countenance he turned away.

"Not for my sake, Aloysius?" she asked.

He turned once more, with the same sad, pitying, longing look, then stooping, raised her hand to his lips, kissed it reverently without a word, and walked silently from the room. Alexis still feigned to pore over the group, and it was not until Lilian fell weeping on his shoulder, that he desisted from that poor pretence.

"Is it my fault, Alexis?" she asked him. "Am I to blame?"

She felt that his whole figure quivered under her touch like a shaken spring, and when she raised her tear-stained face she saw that he was gray to the lips.

"Am I to blame, Alexis?" she asked again.

"No, darling," said Alexis. "You are not to blame. I know he loved you. I know he loves you still. I believe his heart is full of you and that no one else can ever take your place. But you do him a great wrong if you suppose that any feeling that I have won where he has failed could have cost me his friendship. There is no rankling jealousy can find a home in such a heart as his. I believe that heaven never moulded a nobler or a truer. I heard your appeal to him just now, and if I had not known how hopeless it was, and always must be, I would have joined you in it. I tell you Lilian, that Aloysius is a saint—a hero—a martyr. Apart from his Maker, and those holy ministers amongst whom that great soul moves and who console him in sore affliction, I alone can judge him." His voice was choked and broken by his emotion, and the tears fell fast and unheeded down his cheeks. "That man, Lilian, that man——" but there his voice failed him altogether, and he buried his face in his hands. The tears fell like rain between his fingers.

"You love him so?" said Lilian, scarce less moved than he.

"Love!" said Alexis, shaking with his sobs. "I have no right to love. I have no right but to kneel before him in abasement."

"You?" she asked. "In abasement? You?"

That he was curiously volatile in emotion, that he could be easly moved either by mirth or pathos, and that either of them touched him to extremes—all this she knew of Alexis already, but the knowledge afforded no clue to this extraordinary outburst, and her mind was filled with wonder and dismay.

"Let us speak of it no more," said Alexis. "I have done him an intolerable wrong. He will seek for no revenge. He is too magnanimous and too proud, but he cannot forget, and his hand will never touch mine in friendship any more—for ever."

"Alexis," she answered, gently, "if I did not know you better than I think you know yourself I should be more distressed than I am, a thousand times. But, Alexis, it is in your nature to over-estimate everything. You may have given your cousin cause for offense, but—'an intolerable wrong?' It is not in your kindly heart, dear, to do any man an intolerable wrong. Be frank with me, and tell me everything, and let me be the peacemaker between you."

"No, dearest," said Alexis, speaking more calmly; "there can be no peace between us. When you asked him, only a short time ago, to make peace with me for your sake, he did not answer even by word. And there is nothing else which would not be in itself a crime he would not do for your sake. He would die to save you from any sorrow, but he will not take me by the hand again."

"But I will not believe in this intolerable wrong," she answered. "That you have done something by inadvertance or in error is possible, but an intolerable wrong can only be done deliberately and of intention, and that is not you, Alexis, or anything like you."

"It serves, my dear," said Alexis, "if he feels it to be so, and if I cannot pustify myself in my own heart against him."

"Dear," said Lilian, moving to the couch on which he had seated himself and laying her hand caressingly on his shoulder, "dear Alexis. If he could have seen your grief, your pain, the agony of self-reproach and accusation you have shown me since he went away, he would bury everything, whatever it may be. Let me go to him. Let me be your messenger. You are not ashamed that he should know how deeply you regret the wrong you think you did him?"

"No," Alexis answered. "I am not ashamed that he should know it. But I know that there is no possible reconciliation. No! And there could not be if he and I changed places. I would never forgive him or dream of forgiveness. There should be no reconciliation if he lay upon his deathbed."

"What is this dreadful thing, Alexis?" she cried, wringing her hands. "Tell me, tell me, or you will drive me mad."

"I do not wish to speak of it," he answered, with half his face hidden behind his handkerchief; "but it is simple enough, terrible as it is. You know of the story of my uncle's disappearance?"

"Yes. I have heard or read every detail of it."

"You know how suspicion dogged Aloysius's footsteps from the first?"

"Suspicions?" she asked, scornfully. "Whose suspicions? The suspicions of the silly, cruel crowd, who never knew, or had no cause to know, how ridiculously impossible it was that Aloysius Brangwyn should have soiled his hands with a sordid crime? Was there ever any suspicion in the heart of any human creature who knew him as he is—the sad, courteous, kindly, high-minded gentleman? Was there ever any suspicion in your heart or mine?"

"Never in yours," returned Alexis. "That I know, for you were his most loyal defender from the first. But here is my confession, dear. It was my fault, and my fault alone, that suspicion even fastened on him."

"Your fault?" she questioned. "You never thought—you!"

"I—— I—— How shall I say it? I had my fears."

"You?" The word was half-disdainful, half-incredulous.

"I," he answered, brokenly.

"And you spread them" she asked.

"Not wittingly," he said. "Heaven forbid! But men saw them and they, spread, as such things will, and when poor Aloysius after long inquiry was convinced that he had traced them to me he taxed me with the fact. There were circumstances which were difficult to explain, but he condescended to make them clear to me, and I have since done all I could to undo the mischief of which I was the origin. But he has never spoken to me from that day until now, nor will he nor can I ask him."

"Oh, Alexis! You? You so little loyal to your oldest, dearest friend, your companion for so many years!"

"I shall not ask you to forgive me either," said Alexis. "There is only one thing which can be urged in extenuation. There were circumstances known to me alone, of all men, and I was mad with fear lest they should be divulged. That fear betrayed me. That is all."

"You wished so ardently to save him from exposure that you led men on to think him guilty? Is that a very manly account to give of yourself, Alexis? I can only pray that if ever I am in peril heaven may afford me a more trustworthy friend."

He heard the rustle of a dress and looked up, but she was gone.

Hand Organ Trust Hounds Him.

A fierce struggle for supremacy in the hand organ music world is being waged on the South side between the "barrel organ trust" and one Anton Rocco, an independent producer, who has entered the field with an improved music-making device, says the Chicago Daily News.

"Everywhere that Rocco goes the trust is sure to go," is the slogan of the trust, and when Rocco backs his harmony machine against the curb and begins to reel off a yard or so of "The Maiden's Prayer" a trust machine is quickly wheeled into position alongside and lets fire a volley of "Alexander." As usual in these fights of combines, the consumers complain, the public is the victim.

The scene of operations is between Thirty-first and Sixty-third streets and Cottage Grove avenue and Halsted street. Heretofore all barrel organs used in this district were rented to individuals by the trust, which asks a daily fee, but allows the exclusive privilege of the territory to go with the machine. All went well until word was brought to headquarters that there was a competitor in the field who gravely threatened the industry. Not only does Rocco's machine produce the familiar strains, but in the popular songs the bars of the chorus are punctured by a bass drum and cymbals.

The mandate went out from the trust that Rocco must be made to leave the territory and he was told in no simple terms to "skiddoo-a," but he only smiled. Later, he says, threats were made, but he continued to make his rounds, followed by throngs of children. As a last resort the idea of sending another organ was formed. His footsteps have been dogged, he declares, by trust hirelings, and when he makes a stop another organ is placed as near as possible to his machine to confuse his music.

CAN THE SEA ANEMONE THINK?

An Acquarium Incident That Inclines Superintendent to Answer Yes.

The superintendent of the New York aquarium, in commenting on John Burroughs' statement that animals do not think, but act upon instinct, wants some one to tell him when to draw the line between instinct and thought.

A little bit of life as low down in the scale as the sea anemone does something, and Mr. Spencer thinks it thinks.

"A shrimp can hit against it as frequently and as hard as it may," he said, "but the contact is with a living body that it is used to.

"But let me get near it with stick and it closes instantly. It realizes that this is an inorgaic or at least a strange body.

"And when I put a clam, with which it is familiar, on the end of the stick, it still does not open, not even for the food. I have tried it a good many times, always with the same result.

"But one day when I was using the stick to clean out bits of foreign matter from the jar I noticed the little anemone reaching out its feelers toward the stick. It had grown used to it. It was saying: 'Where is the clam?'

"And after that it never closed when I put a clam in the jar on the end of the stick."

Fun for Him.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Mothers Should Watch the Development of Their Daughters—Interesting Experiences of Misses Borman and Mills.

Every mother possesses information which is of vital interest to her young daughter.

Too often this is never imparted or is withheld until serious harm has resulted to the growing girl through her ignorance of nature's mysterious and wonderful laws and penalties.

Girls' over-sensitiveness and modesty often puzzle their mothers and baffle physicians, as they so often withhold their confidence from their mothers and conceal the symptoms which ought to be told to their physician at this critical period.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude; when she is a mystery to herself and friends, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will at this time prepare the system for the coming change, and start this trying period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities.

Hundreds of letters from young girls and from mothers, expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them, have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., at Lynn, Mass.

Miss Mills has written the two following letters to Mrs. Pinkham, which will be read with interest:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (First Letter.)

"I am but fifteen years of age, am depressed, have dizzy spells, chills, headache and backache, and as I have heard that you can give helpful advice to girls in my condition, I am writing you."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (Second Letter.)

"It is with the feeling of utmost gratitude that I write to you to tell you what your valuable medicine has done for me. When I wrote you in regard to my condition I had consulted several doctors, but they failed to understand my case and I did not receive any benefit from their treatment. I followed your advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now healthy and well, and all the distressing symptoms which I had at that time have disappeared."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Miss Matilda Borman writes Mrs. Pinkham as follows:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my periods were irregular and painful, and I always had such dreadful headaches.

"But since taking the Compound my headaches have entirely left me, my periods are regular, and I am getting strong and well. I am telling all my girl friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Matilda Borman, Farmington, Iowa.

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and tell her every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. She will receive advice absolutely free, from a source that has no rival in the experience of woman's ills, and it will, if followed, put her on the right road to a strong, healthy and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of cures of female ills of any medicine that the world has ever known. Why don't you try it?

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

GOTHAM CITY OF BLONDS.

Traveling Man Always Knows When He Is Nearing New York.

"I can always tell when I am getting into New York by the way the blondes begin to thicken," said a traveling man to a Press reporter. "When I am away out in the country districts visiting the small towns the sight of a real blonde is rare. The hair of the majority of the country maids is dark, though I pass an occasional light-colored or red head on the streets. Their hair is often arranged becomingly, but never with a Marcel wave. Their complexions never have the steamed appearance of the city belle, but are fresh and wholesome.

"But day after day as I get nearer New York the lemon-rind blonde begins to crop up. She boards the train bound for New York from the little town where she probably has been visiting the home folk of other relatives and her thoughts probably turn once more to the quick lunch, chewing gum and dignity, or to her place third from the right in the second row of the chorus.

"The dark haired sisters begin to melt away the closer the train gets to the city, so that by the time the outskirts of New York are sighted the dark crop has given away entirely to the peroxide fairy with the rippling Marcel wave and the adjustable waist line. I had heard about blonde being the proper thing for hair, but I thought is was a comic paper joke till I took to the road. One thing certain—New York is the city of blondes."

HARD TO SEE.

Even When the Facts About Coffee Are Plain.

It is curious how people will refuse to believe what one can clearly see.

Tell the average man or woman that the slow but cumulative poisonous effect of caffeine—the alkaloid in tea and coffee—tends to weaken the heart, upset the nervous system and cause indigestion, and they may laugh at you if they don't know the facts.

Prove it by science or by practical demonstration in the recovery of coffee drinkers from the above conditions, and a large per cent. of the human family will shrug their shoulders, take the drugs and—keep on drinking coffee or tea.

"Coffee never agreed with me nor with several members of our household," writes a lady. It enervates, depresses and creates a feeling of languor and heaviness. It was only by leaving off coffee and using Postum that we discovered the cause and cure of these ills.

"The only reason, I am sure, why Postum is not used altogether to the exclusion of ordinary coffee is, many persons do not know and do not seem willing to learn the facts and how to prepare this nutritious beverage. There's only one way—according to directions—boil it fully 15 minutes. Then it is delicious." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Kitty Becomes Tactful

By Paul Creswick

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"I'm early, you'll observe," said I, stating the obvious, so soon as Loftus had announced me and had withdrawn.

"That's the unpardonable sin," smiled Kitty, indicating with one of her little gestures a comfortable chair near the fire. "Unpunctuality is the rudeness of one's acquaintances. Still, as I happen to be ready for once, I'll forgive you."

"I have news, and I knew there wouldn't be a chance of speaking with you when the crowd arrives. But your being ready implies that there may be other early arrivals?"

"I asked Nora Willis—" Kitty began.

"Miss Willis? So you have another confidante? But, of course, all women have at least a score of dear friends to whom they confide individual and separate secrets. You took her to a concert the other night."

"Well?"

"And she was out shopping with you last week!"

"Yours, very possibly. Is that a shock?"

"I'm glad I came early. The plot shall be nipped in the bud, I warn you. I'll be simply horrid to Miss Willis."

I hesitated. I thought that Kitty would have been glad to know that the wheel of fortune seemed to be turning ever so slightly in my direction. But all this about Nora—

"It's of no importance," I said.

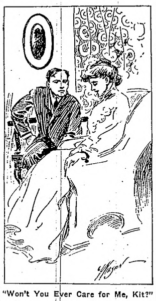
Her ladyship was eyeing me maliciously. "Perhaps I can guess?"

"You wouldn't—in a hundred years. It's not likely to be of any interest to you, now I come to think of it."

"Is it anything to do with the Willoughby case?"

"You have been listening at doors!" I cried, really surprised. "How on earth—"

"Egremont told me you had been briefed for the defense. I congratulate you, Reggie. It's your chance—and you'll make the most of it. If you will pull Willoughby through—and I believe you will—it will be the talk of the town. And when the town talks—"



"Won't You Ever Care for Me, Kit?"

"Reputations disappear," I concluded. "You can't talk a man into fame, although he can be easily talked out of it. Thanks for your congratulations, Kit. It's an opportunity, I will admit. And I came bursting up here with it, just to have Nora Willis—"

"Hush, hush, hush! What a very ungallant young man! What did you expect, Mr. Reginald White? You knew—or you ought to have known—that I should be delighted to hear your news. I was delighted; I am delighted. Can you want anything else?"

I got up and crossed to her. "You know what I want," I whispered. "What I shall keep on wanting until I get it." I took her hand.

"Until you get it?" queried Kitty, slyly. "And afterwards?"

"I shall always love you, Kit—you know that. You're everything to me. My work, my plans, my life—all have the one goal in view. You, at the conclusion of such probation as, in the hardness of your heart, you think fit to inflict. You're the only woman in the world for me."

"You mustn't say these things, Reggie."

"I say them every moment of my life—to myself. You will never let me speak—"

"Please, Reggie! You know that all this has been discussed and settled long ago. I'm only to be a fairy godmother. You promised."

She drew away her fingers gently. "Won't you ever care for me, Kit?"

"I care for you too much, dear, to think of spoiling your career. You'll thank me, one of these days. I'll confess something, too—if you'll only not misunderstand me; I knew you'd come early, and I feared that you might say things. So that was why I was ready, and why I asked Nora to come early, too."

"Then you do love me, Kit? Really, really?"

"Of course—in a fairy godmother's way! Now, sit down again, and be normal once more. You haven't asked me which theater—"

"Any theater, any place—if you are going to be there. Kit, it's true as goodness. Every step I take upward—and, latterly, I have been lucky—brings me nearer to you; so I hope and so I pray. I shall win. If a man only wants a thing hard enough, he gets it at last. And I want you. Kitty, say there's just a chance—just a little possibility—that one day you'll leave off being a fairy godmother to me?"

She met my gaze with a queer, half-nervous expression in her dear eyes. "I wonder?" she murmured, uncertainly for her. "I wonder, Reggie?"

She smiled, whimsically. "Of course, even a fairy godmother is only responsible until her charge grows up. So that there must come an end. Everything comes to an end; that's a sad thought, Reggie. One is wise to make the best of things while they last; not to be always and always looking for the morrow."

"We can't stand still," I argued.

"That's the worst of it." She turned away from me, and silence fell between us. I stood and gazed my fill upon her, and thanked God for giving me my great love for her—hopeless, or not, as time should show. She had spoken of the inevitable law which seems to, presently, cut off all the hopes, and the friendships, and the joys, and the tears of this little world, as though they had never been; but I knew, even then, that there could be no real parting of the ways between Kitty and myself.

No man who loves a good woman can fail to be ennobled by his passion; there, at least, was one argument in favor of my cherishing my regard for Kit. I had it in me to say so much; but she was speaking.

"What is there against Nora, Reggie? Surely she is very pretty, and sweet? And accomplished?"

"It is not proper of me to talk of Miss Willis," I answered, gravely. "It would be impertinent in me to do so."

"Yes, I know. But I do so want to understand. What is it that makes a man love a woman? It must be, primarily, because of some outward sign."

"My dear, we are dealing with mysteries. I suppose your question has puzzled the coldly intellectual ones of this planet ever since it was resolved from chaos. Primarily, I will allow a point to the possessor of a pretty face. But only a point. Expression, charm of manner, tact—those are the deadly weapons of a woman. It is given to nearly every girl to be able to create an effect, on her first appearance. There was once a lady who dyed her hair vermilion; yet even she only scored for a second or two. But the gracious, graceful, tactful creature—"

"Who knows how to flatter a man?"

I sat down and allowed her ladyship to continue. "Who talks to him about himself, without letting him see? Who has the enviable power of being able to efface herself whilst being very actually present?"

"I think you're near the mark," I agreed. "But all this only applies to some men. For my part, I always perceive the serpent. When you asked Nora Willis to meet me, I instinctively guessed that this was merely tact on your part."

"Reggie, you're perfectly odious! Still, I had rather know you in your true colors. Were all your perfervid protestations of a few minutes since—tact?"

"I must decline to answer," said I, in my best legal manner. "The question is beside the mark. I am merely endeavoring to explain why men usually fall in love. There are other reasons. The woman may be rich, or possess great influence in the right quarters. She may be an excellent cook. That is a very certain draw. The girl who makes her own dresses, on the contrary, usually starts handicapped."

"Poor thing!"

"I thought that would appeal to you. Magazines that give away paper patterns ought to be abolished. The state should supply every girl with an outfit, properly fashioned; and dressmakers should be compelled to work all day long for nothing."

"I wish you could be serious, Reggie. Just now and then."

"I'm perfectly serious. Don't you, dear, expect your dressmaker to come at nine and work without ceasing until seven in the evening—for a wage that wouldn't keep a boy in sweets? However, we will not wander from our subject. It's high time she appeared, if really coming before the crowd. If she's not here within five minutes, all her sweetness—and—tact—and your preliminary booming, will avail nothing. I'm going."

"As a matter of fact," said Kitty, artlessly, "I don't honestly expect Nora until half-past five."

"But you said—"

"I had asked her to be here early? Quite correct. I had asked her—on paper. But I didn't post the letter."

"Why not?"

"Oh, I don't know. Perhaps I forgot. Probably I thought it was within my powers to sustain another tete a-tete with you."

"If I hadn't been expecting every moment to have Nora Willis jumping in on us, Kate, I shouldn't have taken—"

"Well?"

"Your first no for an answer. I would have settled the fairy godmother business for good and all. I was braced to the encounter. As it is, the matter is simply postponed. What a little wretch you are! I find there's another deadly plan of battle for woman—one most certain to succeed."

"Tell me, Reginald."

"A girl must understand how to run away, and yet always keep in sight! It's the most exasperating and diabolical device that Eve has bequeathed to her daughters. Good-by—Kate."

THEY CURE RHEUMATISM

A Particularly Painful Form of This Disease Yields to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Of the many forms which rheumatism takes, that which is popularly known as sciatic rheumatism probably tortures its victim more than any other. That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured this stubborn as well as painful trouble is a fact proven by the following statement, and no sufferer who reads this can afford to let prejudice stand in the way of trying these blood-making pills.

Rheumatism is now generally recognized as a disease of the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make—actually make—pure blood. When the blood is pure there can be no rheumatism. Mrs. Thomas Bresnehan, of 54 Mill street, Watertown, N. Y., says:

"My trouble began with a severe cold which I took about a week before Christmas in 1904. I began to have rheumatic pains in my back and limbs and after a time I couldn't straighten up. I suffered the most awful pain for months and much of the time was unable to leave the house and I had to take hold of a chair in order to walk and sometimes I could not stand up at all.

"The disease was pronounced sciatic rheumatism and, although I had a good physician and took his medicine faithfully, I did not get any better. After some six weeks of this terrible pain and suffering I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and that is the medicine that cured me. After a few boxes the pain was less intense and I could see decided improvement. I continued to take the pills until I was entirely cured and I have never had any return of the trouble."

All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or the remedy will be mailed postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

FISH THAT WALK ASHORE.

Australian Freak Would Speedily Die in Deep Water.

Several examples of a zoological paradox—a fish which would speedily be drowned if placed in deep water—have just been added to the collection at Regent's Park, says the London Graphic. This is the African walking fish, which spends the greater part of its existence upon the mud banks of tropical rivers.

Its method of progression has been described by naturalists as of the "hop, skip and jump" variety, and when journeying inland, as it does over long distances, it climbs by means of the breast fins over the roots and even into the boughs of trees.

The church that does not invest in humanity has no dividends awaiting it in heaven.

You cannot chase away this world's gloom with a cast iron smile.

DO YOU KNOW

That the milkman is one to make you take water.

That some women are pensive and others expensive.

That all things come to those who wait on themselves.

That a man's credit may be good but his cash is better.

That some men win great moral victories and others get the votes.

That a cornet player is not always to be censured for going on a toot.

That the average man is never so happy as when he is posing as a critic.

That getting engaged is pretty hard lines when that wasn't what you meant.

That we would like to know why every mother teaches her kid to say he is a "bad boy."

That people sin, but it is not because they are anxious for the wages thereof.—Ex.

That what you say of your neighbors may be nothing compared with what they think of you.

That there is no half way point with a woman. She is either very generous or very stingy.

That a bachelor says if a woman is very tall her stockings make her feel as if she weren't dressed.

That when you are laying up some thing for a rainy day it would be well to start with an umbrella.

That all the world's a stage but most of us sit in the gallery and throw things at the performers.

That in Thief River Falls when a man is clubbed by a policeman they ask what offense he is innocent of.

That if you think twice before you speak when talking with a woman you will never get a chance to speak.

That all men are created free. If some of them want to get married and spoil it all, that's their business.—Ex.

That a woman thinks she would have a much better figure if her friends weren't so spiteful as to say she hadn't.

That it is said a woman never realizes that a man has bad habits until she has been married to him at least three days.

That figures may not lie, but they are not always what they appear to be—thanks to the cunning of tailors and dressmakers.

That women who vainly imagine they look like Venus because they do not wear corsets should remember that Venus did not wear anything at all.

That a woman says after a bachelor passes the age of forty it's up to him to marry a widow if he marries at all. He needs a wife who knows beforehand how cranky men are.

That it must have been a snap to have been Eve in October. Think of the beautiful colors in raiment she had by going out and picking up autumn leaves.—Atchinson Globe

That a Red Lake Falls man was standing in front of the mirror, his face lathered and an open razor in his hand. His wife came in, looked at him and said, "Are you shaving?" "No," he replied "I am blacking the kitchen range, where are you, out driving or attending a meeting of the Ladies Aid?"

That how much more content and happier we would be, if we compared our situation with those whose condition is much worse than our own, instead of thinking only of those who are ahead and above us. It is a weakness of the human race to be always envying those whose lot seems to be better than our own. Happiness consists more in being content with what we have than in the revelry of luxury.—Ex.

"All parties expectin' mail are hereby notified to get all that's comin' to 'em in advance—any time before next Thursday, that being the day we have appointed to go huntin'—not havin' had a holiday from the government since July 4, and the said government seemin' to forget that, bein' only human, we need rest and recreation occasionally. ART LECTURE NEXT ONE

Lyceum Bureau Sends J. Lorenzo Zwickey for Nov. 21.

The next entertainment of the Midland Lyceum Bureau's course comes to the Metropolitan next Wednesday evening, November 21. It will be a lecture on the "Philosophy of the beautiful," by J. Lorenzo Zwickey.

Fine art is fast becoming recognized as one of the essential factors of a complete education, and it was in response to a popular demand that Mr. Zwickey was engaged for this course. He introduces his audience to the interior of his studio and produces beautiful pictures before them, while his discourse presents the most valuable principles of fine art.

Daily Courier, Waterloo, Iowa—J. Lorenzo Zwickey is a man of high attainments, an artist of merit and a man whom Waterloo people delight to honor. He did work on the platform which for rapidity of execution and artistic effect could hardly be exceeded by George E. Little, America's greatest chalk talker. The lecture breathes a high moral spirit, and the delivery of it will not only delight his audiences, but emphasize in their minds that to see beauty one must carry beauty in the soul. It is an exalting lecture.

OLD SORES FED AND KEPT OPEN BY IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

Whenever a sore refuses to heal it is because the blood is not pure and healthy, as it should be, but is infected with poisonous germs or some old blood taint which has corrupted and polluted the circulation. Those most usually afflicted with old sores are persons who have reached or passed middle life. The vitality of the blood and strength of the system have naturally begun to decline, and the poisonous germs which have accumulated because of a sluggish and inactive condition of the system, or some hereditary taint which has hitherto been held in check, now force an outlet on the face, arms, legs or other part of the body. The place grows red and angry, festers and eats into the surrounding tissue until it becomes a chronic and stubborn ulcer, fed and kept open by the impurities with which the blood is saturated. Nothing is more trying and disagreeable than a stubborn, non-healing sore. The very fact that it resists ordinary remedies and treatments is good reason for suspicion; the same germ-producing cancerous ulcers is back of every old sore, and especially is this true if the trouble is an inherited one. Washes, salves, nor indeed anything else, applied directly to the sore, can do any permanent good; neither will removing the sore with caustic plasters or the surgeon's knife make a lasting cure. If every particle of the diseased flesh were taken away another sore would come, because the trouble is in the blood, and the BLOOD CANNOT BE CUT AWAY. The cure must come by a thorough cleansing of the blood. In S. S. S. will be found a remedy for sores and ulcers of every kind. It is an unequalled blood purifier—one that goes directly into the circulation and promptly cleanses it of all poisons and taints. It gets down to the very bottom of the trouble and forces out every trace of impurity and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. changes the quality of the blood so that instead of feeding the diseased parts with impurities, it nourishes the irritated, inflamed flesh with healthy blood. Then the sore begins to heal, new flesh is formed, all pain and inflammation leaves, the place scabs over, and when S. S. S. has purified the blood the sore is permanently cured. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Write for our special book on sores and ulcers and any other medical advice you desire. We make no charge for the book or advice.

I was afflicted with a sore on my face of four years' standing. It was a small pimple at first but it gradually grew larger and worse in every way until I became alarmed about it and consulted several physicians. They all treated me but the sore continued to grow worse. I saw S. S. S. advertised and commenced its use and after taking it a while I was completely cured. My blood is now pure and healthy from the effect of S. S. S., and there has not been any sign of the sore since S. S. S. cured it.

USES BOGUS BOMB TO SAVE HIS JOB

MOSCOW PREFECT SEEKS TO REVIVE WANING PRESTIGE BY FRAUD.

FOUR MEN ARE SHOT TO DEATH

BLOODTHIRSTY NEGRO STARTS ON TOUR OF MURDER AT ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Moscow, Nov. 15. — Gen. Rheinbot, prefect of police of Moscow, has received hundreds of messages, including a personal communication from Emperor Nicholas, congratulating him on his escape from assassination Monday. In spite of these congratulations, which give color to the official version of the attempt on the prefect's life, there are ugly rumors in Moscow that Gen. Rheinbot was himself the author of the plot against his own life.

Was Wily Scheme.

He is thought to have schemed to retrieve his sinking fortunes and to stave off retirement, it having been decided on in official circles to relieve him from duty.

These suspicions are supported by circumstantial eveidence. Gen. Rheinbot, at the time the attempt on his life was made, was following an unusual path on foot, through narrow alleys. The bomb exploded in a manner described as highly suspicious.

Bomb an Imitation.

Pieces picked up on the spot show it to have been nothing more than an imitation bomb. On account of the indignation aroused at the statement that Gen. Rheinbot shot down his assailant while the terrorist was being held by two policemen, a statement is issued to the effect that the bomb thrower, when he was killed by the general, was struggling to escape. Gen. Rheinbot, however, is alleged to have shot him to get rid of him.

DESPERADO RUNS AMUCK.

Bloodthirsty Negro Starts on Tour of Murder at Asheville, N. C.

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 15.—Fighting bravely in defense of their police captain, Patrolmen Charles Blackstock and William Bailey of this city were shot to death last night by a negro, who also killed one negro and fatally wounded another. The murderer gave his name as Will Harris of Charlotte, N. C., a desperado, for whom a large reward has been standing for some time. Prior to the death of the two officers a negro restaurant keeper named Ben Allison was shot and killed by Harris without provocation. Another negro named Tom Neil lies mortally wounded, he, too, being shot before the officers took a hand in the melee.

Harris started on his tour from a negro house. He fired into two houses as he made his way to South Main street, and wounded Allison. Later the desperado encountered Tom Neil and fired at him. Police Captain Page and Officers Bailey and Blackstock rushed from police headquarters in pursuit. Capt. Page received a bullet in the arm from the negro's rifle. Page called upon Blackstock to fire, but before that officer could do so Blackstock fell dead with a bullet in his chest. Bailey fired twice without hitting and the negro then shot and killed Bailey, afterwards escaping.

A general alarm was turned in to call out the militia companies, and several armed posses quickly formed to pursue the murderer.

WILL SMASH THE COMBINE

KELLOGG AND MORRISON TAKE STEPS TO START WHEELS OF JUSTICE.

Washington, Nov. 15.—Current gossip that apparently has its source in circles of authority indicate that Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, special assistant attorney general, and his associate, Mr. Morrison of Chicago, are about to initiate in the courts proceedings of unprecedented importance and scope, and the smashing of the Standard Oil trust is believed to be foreshadowed as the prime result.

To Start the Suits.

Attorneys Kellogg and Morrison left Washington yesterday for an unknown destination. At the same time it was intimated at the department of justice that on Thursday announcement would be made of the plans and purpose of the government in its program for the curbing of the Rockefeller trust. It is understood that Messrs. Kellogg and Morrison will complete the preliminary steps to the litigation on Thursday at the place where the proceedings will be commenced, and then the government's promised announcement will be published.

Gigantic in Scope.

So much is now known here regarding the intentions of the government in these great suits that the prediction may be safely ventured that it will be by far the most gigantic proceeding of its kind. If it is successful it will smash the gigantic oil combination that has become obnoxious by its practical monopolization of the trade of the country in oil and obtaining advantages through rebates and discriminations in railroad transportation.

BATTLE LAKE IS SWEPT BY FIRE

STORM AIDS IN DESTRUCTION

WIND SCATTERS EMBERS AND HEAVY SNOW HINDERS WORK OF FIREMEN.

Battle Lake, Minn., Nov. 17. — Fire last night wiped out the entire business section of this village, comprising all that part of the place on the west side of the river, with the exception of one residence. Every able-bodied male citizen of the village joined the brigade of fire fighters, but in the absence of a regular fire department the flames had gained considerable headway before the efforts of the citizens were brought under systematic control, the single fire engine being of little avail.

Snow Storm Rages.

Throughout the fire a heavy snow storm, accompanied by a high wind, was raging, and this, while it appeared to have little effect on the fierceness of the blaze, hampered the men in their work.

The fire started late in the afternoon in the Heimark jewelry store, and while men were attempting to subdue the flames inside the building the fire broke through the roof and walls and seized upon the structures on either side of the store.

Bucket Brigade Formed.

The ringing of bells brought out every man and boy of the 600 population of the village, and bucket brigades were formed at the points where the flames appeared to be the fiercest.

Within two hours after the first blaze was discovered it was seen that the half dozen stores which then had taken fire were beyond any possibility of being saved, and attention was given to trying to prevent the flames spreading to the other building. The wind carried embers to adjoining roofs, and meanwhile the snow and slush made it difficult for the men to get around to fight the fire.

Worst Village Has Known.

By midnight every business house in the village which had not already been reduced to ruins was in flames, and there was no possibility of checking the blaze.

The fire is the worst this village ever has suffered. The exact amount of the damage is not known, but fifteen store buildings, with almost their entire contents, have been entirely destroyed.

Dietz have just become known. Mr. Tucker, in his report to the governor, says that the conditions in Sawyer county are of such a nature that the chief executive is justified in sending militia aid, as requested by Sheriff Gylland and recommended by District Attorney Frank L. McNamara and Judge Vinje. Mr. Tucker in his report says that Dietz is generally regarded as a desperate man—an outlaw. He says that conditions are such that Dietz cannot be arrested without assistance from the state. The Dietz family, he says, is in open rebellion against the state, and it is the governor's duty to see that the laws are enforced.

No untoward or unexpected incident occurred.

President Roosevelt left the Louisiana at half past 7 o'clock yesterday morning and came to the Colon dock. Here he was welcomed by Canal Commissioned Shonts, Chief Engineer Stevens and other officials, and the school children of Colon sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "America" for his benefit. The murderer gave his name as Will Harris of Charlotte, N. C., a desperado, for whom a large reward has been standing for some time. Prior to the death of the two officers a negro restaurant keeper named Ben Allison was shot and killed by Harris without provocation. Another negro named Tom Neil lies mortally wounded, he, too, being shot before the officers took a hand in the melee.

Harris started on his tour from a negro house. He fired into two houses as he made his way to South Main street, and wounded Allison. Later the desperado encountered Tom Neil and fired at him. Police Captain Page and Officers Bailey and Blackstock rushed from police headquarters in pursuit. Capt. Page received a bullet in the arm from the negro's rifle. Page called upon Blackstock to fire, but before that officer could do so Blackstock fell dead with a bullet in his chest. Bailey fired twice without hitting and the negro then shot and killed Bailey, afterwards escaping.

A general alarm was turned in to call out the militia companies, and several armed posses quickly formed to pursue the murderer.

WILL SMASH THE COMBINE

KELLOGG AND MORRISON TAKE STEPS TO START WHEELS OF JUSTICE.

Washington, Nov. 15.—Current gossip that apparently has its source in circles of authority indicate that Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, special assistant attorney general, and his associate, Mr. Morrison of Chicago, are about to initiate in the courts proceedings of unprecedented importance and scope, and the smashing of the Standard Oil trust is believed to be foreshadowed as the prime result.

To Start the Suits.

Attorneys Kellogg and Morrison left Washington yesterday for an unknown destination. At the same time it was intimated at the department of justice that on Thursday announcement would be made of the plans and purpose of the government in its program for the crushing of the Rockefeller trust. It is understood that Messrs. Kellogg and Morrison will complete the preliminary steps to the litigation on Thursday at the place where the proceedings will be commenced, and then the government's promised announcement will be published.

Gigantic in Scope.

So much is now known here regarding the intentions of the government in these great suits that the prediction may be safely ventured that it will be by far the most gigantic proceeding of its kind. If it is successful it will smash the gigantic oil combination that has become obnoxious by its practical monopolization of the trade of the country in oil and obtaining advantages through rebates and discriminations in railroad transportation.

Kresky and McCowen are liable to a fine of from $1,000 to $10,000 and imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding two years, or both the fine and imprisonment. Hartley is liable to a fine of from $1,000 to $20,000.

BATTLE LAKE IS SWEPT BY FIRE

STORM AIDS IN DESTRUCTION

WIND SCATTERS EMBERS AND HEAVY SNOW HINDERS WORK OF FIREMEN.

Battle Lake, Minn., Nov. 17. — Fire last night wiped out the entire business section of this village, comprising all that part of the place on the west side of the river, with the exception of one residence. Every able-bodied male citizen of the village joined the brigade of fire fighters, but in the absence of a regular fire department the flames had gained considerable headway before the efforts of the citizens were brought under systematic control, the single fire engine being of little avail.

Snow Storm Rages.

Throughout the fire a heavy snow storm, accompanied by a high wind, was raging, and this, while it appeared to have little effect on the fierceness of the blaze, hampered the men in their work.

The fire started late in the afternoon in the Heimark jewelry store, and while men were attempting to subdue the flames inside the building the fire broke through the roof and walls and seized upon the structures on either side of the store.

Bucket Brigade Formed.

The ringing of bells brought out every man and boy of the 600 population of the village, and bucket brigades were formed at the points where the flames appeared to be the fiercest.

Within two hours after the first blaze was discovered it was seen that the half dozen stores which then had taken fire were beyond any possibility of being saved, and attention was given to trying to prevent the flames spreading to the other buildings. The wind carried embers to adjoining roofs, and meanwhile the snow and slush made it difficult for the men to get around to fight the fire.

Worst Village Has Known.

By midnight every business house in the village which had not already been reduced to ruins was in flames, and there was no possibility of checking the blaze.

The fire is the worst this village ever has suffered. The exact amount of the damage is not known, but fifteen store buildings, with almost their entire contents, have been entirely destroyed.

BRAND DIETZ AS AN OUTLAW.

State Officials Advise Governor to Send Militia to Take Him.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Nov. 17.—The results of the visit of Assistant Attorney General F. T. Tucker and Adjt. Gen. Boardman to Rice Lake and Hayward to investigate the attempts to arrest John F. Dietz have just become known. Mr. Tucker, in his report to the governor, says that the conditions in Sawyer county are of such a nature that the chief executive is justified in sending militia aid, as requested by Sheriff Gylland and recommended by District Attorney Frank L. McNamara and Judge Vinje. Mr. Tucker in his report says that Dietz is generally regarded as a desperate man—an outlaw. He says that conditions are such that Dietz cannot be arrested without assistance from the state. The Dietz family, he says, is in open rebellion against the state, and it is the governor's duty to see that the laws are enforced.

He crossed from Colon to Panama, seeing much of the canal and the famous Culebra cut on the way. He took a trip around Panama bay and was welcomed in Panama city, which lies outside of the canal zone, by President Amador and other officials of the Panaman republic. No untoward or unexpected incident occurred.

Given Hearty Greeting.

President Roosevelt left the Louisiana at half past 7 o'clock yesterday morning and came to the Colon dock. Here he was welcomed by Canal Commissioner Shonts, Chief Engineer Stevens and other officials, and the school children of Colon sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "America" for his benefit. A few moments later President Roosevelt was greeted by President and Mrs. Amador. At 8:10 a. m. the president and those who had come to welcome him left Colon for Panama by train. The trip across the isthmus was made slowly in order to permit the presidential party to have a good look at all the points of interest.

Welcomed on Foreign Soil.

The president went to Panama city in the afternoon. He drove from the railroad station to the Cathedral plaza, welcomed all the way by cheering crowds. At the plaza President Amador delivered an address of welcome and President Roosevelt responded, after which, escorted by the officials of the Panama republic and a bodyguard of 200 mounted members of the Panama aristocracy the president returned to the Tivoli hotel for the night.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

News of the Northwest.

WILL USE MILITIA TO CAPTURE DIETZ

CAMERON DAM MAN TO BE TAKEN BY TROOPS IF HE DOES NOT SURRENDER.

GOVERNOR WILL TAKE ACTION

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Nov. 14. — When Gov. James O. Davidson was here last September he stated that John F. Dietz could not be allowed long to continue to defy the laws of Wisconsin. He had been asked by Sheriff Gylland to assist, in sending the state militia, to capture the Cameron dam man, but Gov. Davidson did not care to do so until he had positively learned that the Sawyer county authorities had exhausted all means at their disposal. It is firmly believed here that Dietz's capture will soon be effected and that Gov. Davidson will give the desired aid. The fact that the majority of the voters indorsed District Attorney Frank L. McNamara, who pledged himself to put an end to the fiasco, and that Attorney General Sturdevant has informed Gov. Davidson that he has authority to call out the militia to capture Dietz, would seem to bear out this position.

BUTTERMAKERS PICK ST. PAUL.

Will Hold Next Annual Convention in This City.

St. Paul will have the next annual convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' association. The convention will be held in the auditorium next October, and will bring about 1,000 buttermakers and creamery men from the dairy states of the country.

There was a lively contest between Chicago and St. Paul, and St. Paul won by a vote of 3 to 2. The city of St. Paul and the Commercial club made the association an offer of $4,000, and the use of the auditorium if it would come here.

The city of Chicago did not offer anything to get the convention, but the National Dairy Show association, which holds its convention and exhibition annually in Chicago, invited the buttermakers to meet with it, and made an offer similar to that made by St. Paul. Some of the committee favored having the convention in Chicago all the time, but others thought that as Minnesota is the great dairy state and has the largest membership she is entitled to some consideration.

The conventions formerly have been held in the winter, usually in February. But the committee found a change from the winter to the fall of the year desirable, and selected October. There are many buttermakers who cannot get away from their work in the winter, and October is a suitable time for them, as the work in the creameries at that time of the year is unusually light.

The association met in St. Paul in the spring of 1901 and at that time brought together 1,000 delegates. The association has been growing since then, so there is reason to expect a large gathering.

CLEMENT MUST GO TO PRISON.

Faribault Banker Will Serve Eight Years.

The United States circuit court of appeals handed down a decision affirming the judgment of the United States district court in sentencing Thomas B. Clement, the Faribault banker, to eight years in the state penitentiary.

Clement was indicted in the United States district court for making false entries and willful misapplications of the funds and credits of the First National Bank of Faribault, of which he was president. He challenged the panels of the grand and petit juries, because they were drawn from the district at large and were not composed of persons who resided in the Third division of the district. He demurred to some counts of the indictment on the ground of duplicity. He moved for a continuance of the case at the time it was first set for trial, on the ground that his physical infirmities disabled him from preparing for trial. At the close of the case he demurred to the evidence on the ground that it failed to establish the commission of any of the offenses charged. He filed a motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that the indictment charged no criminal offenses.

These challenges, demurrers and motions were overruled and denied and the defendant was found guilty on twenty-four of the twenty-seven counts of the indictment.

JUBILEE OF THE STATE.

Chairman Mannix Asks the Historical Society to Make Suggestions.

Preliminary plans for the proposed semi-centennial celebration of the admission of Minnesota into the Union were presented by J. T. Mannix of Minneapolis, chairman of the commission, before the state historical society at a meeting at the old capitol in St. Paul. Mr. Mannix said that while no definite plan had been decided by the commission, the idea of holding a dignified, strong and splendid celebration was wholly agreeable to the people of the state. Nineteen of every twenty of the public spirited, intelligent and enterprising men of the state are in favor of it.

He related the proceedings at the meeting held at the governor's office last spring, when the St. Paul committee presented its plan of having an exhibition in connection with the state fair in 1908, and also the meeting with the directors of the state agricultural society. He read a letter from E. W. Randall, secretary of the society, stating that the members of the society are willing and will be glad to co-operate in the celebration.

If an exhibition is to be held on a large scale there will be needed eighty acres of additional land, a sewer system, a light and power plant and an exposition building. All these, he said, are needed for future state fairs, anyway. Mr. Mannix asked the historical society to appoint a committee to suggest further plans for the celebration. President N. P. Langford said he would appoint such a committee soon.

Mrs. Louise South of Moorhead was badly injured and had a narrow escape from being cremated in a fire which destroyed her dwelling. The woman had prepared for bed and carried a lighted lamp. As she was descending the stairs she slipped and fell down the entire flight.

Edward H. Oswald, Duluth, 41 and unmarried, committed suicide at the Metropole hotel by taking carboll acid. He was a man of varied occupations, but always an active worker in the Democratic party.

Capt. Frank Webber of Fire Department No. 2 at Winona, was blown from the roof of a house in which there was a small fire by a mysterious explosion, which is believed to have been an explosion of smoke. He had several ribs broken and his condition is considered critical.

WAGES ON RUSSIAN FARMS.

Agricultural Laborer Receives Only $32 a Year and Subsistence.

The extreme poverty and the low standard of living of peasants from whom the agricultural laborers are recruited assure a low level of wages for agricultural labor. The average wages will appear almost incredibly low from an American point of view, notwithstanding the general complaints of the estate holders concerning the unreasonable demands of the laborers.

According to an official investigation embracing the decade of 1882-1891, the average annual wages for a male agricultural worker in Russia were less than $32 and for a female worker less than $18. To this must be added the cost of subsistence, which is equally low, being on an average $24 for a male and $22 for a female worker for a whole year, so that the average cost of employing a laborer for the entire year is equal to only $55 for the mael and $40 for the female.

The wages for the summer season of five months are almost equal to the annual wages, being $22 for the male and $13 for the female laborer.

An Old Friend.

A colored brother in a Southern town had joined every church in the hamlet, and had been paptized by immersion each time he was received into the fold of a different denomination. When at last he cast his lot with the Baptists the announcement was made that the baptizing would take place at 4 o'clock the next afternoon.

One old sister in Zion leaned over and whispered to another: Brudder Jackson done been baptized so often dat de fish in de creek most sholy be right well acquainted wid him."

Her Affinity.

"Katherine, you are such a pronounced vegetarian"

"Yes, dear."

"Well, the new boarder around the corner will just suit you for a husband."

"Gracious! Why so?"

"Because he has tomatolike cheeks, pumpkin-colored hair, and carroty whiskers."

What She Thought of It.

"I saw you at the concert last night," said Mrs. Oldcastle.

"Yes," replied the hostess, "me and Josiah are both so fond of music, you know."

"What did you think of Sawmore's technique?"

"Well, to tell the truth, I didn't notice it, but I thought his fiddlin' was just grand."

Red Lake Courier.

Printed Every Thursday at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE COUNTY
OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$. 00 Per Year, in Advance.

It is getting to be fairly reputable to be a Democrat in Minnesota.

Charlie Latta, he of the Plummer Pioneer, must be worrying again over a county printing distribution for he is saying unnice things about the Courier and its former editor. Don't do it if it hurts you.

Harry Ives predicted a plurality of 500 for Cole in Red Lake county. He missed it by 1,530 or 115 per cent. As a political prognosticator Harry is entitled to enter the John Eastman class without further credentials.

Cole is said to have had an efficient and loyal committee and the support of every Republican politician from Bill Grimshaw down to Silas W. Leavitt, and yet he received only half of the Republican vote. Is it possible that there were a few big black flies on the candidate himself?

Thief River Falls won the fight. Let them rejoice and make merry, we only hope they will build their bonfire big enough to be seen down here.—Red Lake Falls Courier.

We are not going to build that bonfire until we get the county seat and then it will be big enough to be seen in all parts of Red Lake county.—Thief River Falls News.

Not until you get the county seat? Oh, dear!

The Thief River Falls News says the attack on Mayor Duffy happened at all is regretted more by the residents of Thief River Falls than anything in the whole campaign. Yet the News was suspiciously silent of the regret in its issue following the affair and it was only after it had seen the effect of the dastardly prearrangement of the assault that it began to make an outward show of regret. Bah, the News is as big a humbug as it is a liar. And that's going some.

The Thief River Falls News says that the Red Lake Falls Courier lies, and everybody knows that the News is a chronic and unscrupulous liar. It is pretty generally conceded that those in search of the truth have given up hopes of finding it in either the News or the Courier.—Plummer Pioneer.

It may be so but it is a cinch that the Pioneer doesn't set type enough any week to tell a respectable lie.

The Thief River Falls News' "corrected" account of the assault on Mayor Duffy sounds like its story of how Red Lake Falls was trying to destroy the hamlet of Wylie and every one knows what that was. Why, even the Plummer says the News is a chronic and unscrupulous liar. The Pioneer might also have added it is a bungling and senseless liar and then not come within four thousand miles of dcing anything like substantial justice to that prince of cheap and tawdry liars.

The statements of the First State Bank and Merchants State Bank appear in this issue of the Courier. It is pleasing to note that both of the banks show a handsome increase in totals since the last report. The banks are an exact barometer of the business condition, and the $375,000 of resources shown by our local financial institutions speak highly of of the general prosperity of Red Lake county.

Norman County Index—Mayor J. A. Duffy, of Red Lake Falls, who formerly lived in Ada, was viciously assaulted at Thief River Falls election day because he was doing duty there as official "challenger" at the election. This was an echo of the hot county seat fight in that county, but Thief River Falls has certainly disgraced itself, and we predict the people of Red Lake county will yet show their resentment of such methods. At last accounts Mr. Duffy was improving, but was still confined to his home at Red Lake Falls.

A county Sunday school convention will be held at Thief River Falls Friday and Saturday of this week. It will be in charge of State Secretary A. M. Socker of St. Paul, assisted by Miss Grace Longfellow of Minneapolis and Miss Louise Emery of St. Paul. Among those from Red Lake Falls who will attend are Rev. H. W. CLOTHING FIRM TO QUIT

Berthon & Armstrong Will Remove to Missoula, Montana.

Announcement is made this week of the going out of business and removal from the city of Berthon & Armstrong, Red Lake Falls' only exclusive clothing and furnishing store. The store is closed for the purpose of marking down the goods but will be opened Saturday morning for a ten days big sacrifice sale.

It is the intention to close out the entire stock as both Mr. Berthon and Mr. Armstrong will remove from the city. They will continue in partnership and have already secured a most advantageous location in Missoula, Mont., where they will engage in the same line of business. There is nothing in their stock here that they will take with them as they will go into business in Missoula on a much larger scale and carry a higher grade of goods than would be warranted by the trade in Red Lake Falls. So their closing out sale is genuine without any reservation whatever. Of the going of this firm, it may be said it is a very distinct loss to Red Lake Falls as it will be long before there will come two more gentlemen to so well occupy the positions of prominence in in the business and social life of the city. They have been identified generously and public spiritedly in every movement that made toward advancement; their store has always been in advance of the requirements of the trade; both have been mainstays of the band of which Red Lake Falls is so justly proud; their reputations for liberality and business honor have been as broad as their acquaintance is wide; and with their families they have been prominent socially. Mr. Berthon has been president of the Commercial Club since its organization. The date of their leaving the city is not yet determined upon but in all probability will be as soon as they can dispose of their stock of goods.

The Courier joins in what must be a general regret over the city's loss and an equally general wish for every manner of success to Berthon & Armstrong in their future location.

Aluminum Paper in Germany.

Aluminum paper is now manufactured in Germany and recommended as a substitute for tin foil. The paper used is a sort of artificial parchment obtained through the action of sulphuric acid upon ordinary paper. The sheets are spread out and covered upon one side with a thin coating of a solution of rosin in alcohol or ether. Evaporation is hastened by means of a current of air, and the paper is then warmed until the rosin has again become soft. Then powdered aluminum is sprinkled on it, and the paper is subjected to strong pressure to fasten the powder thereon. Golden grain belt beer is sanitarily and scientifically brewed and should go into the homes as a nerve builder and health maker. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex. COCOON COLORS THE SILK.

Food Given to the Worm Does Away With Need of Dyes.

European newspapers have been discussing the results of the experiments made by M. Levrah in affecting silk worms by coloring their food so that the cocoons could be made to yield colored silk, thus obviating the necessity of the dyer's work in giving hue to the silk in the thread or piece. In experimenting in this work the object was to discover if possible why some breeds of silk worms produce white silk while others produce yellow or a yellowish green silk. The experiments showed that the natural coloring matter of the cocoons was identical with the coloring matter found in the leaves. It was therefore logical to believe that the color of the silk must originate in the chlorophyl of the leaves fed to the worms.

Then the experiments which followed, undertaken to test this hypothesis, prove that a coloring matter introduced into the intestines of a worm by means of a food may under certain conditions reach the silk through the blood. The coloring matter to cross by osmosis the tissues of silk worms and each race of silk worms is characterized by the osmotic power of its tissues in relation to different coloring matters, permitting the passage of some to the exclusion of others.

IT'S THE FOOD.

The True Way to Correct Nervous Troubles.

Nervous troubles are more often caused by improper food and indigestion than most people imagine. Even doctors sometimes overlook this fact. A man says:

"Until two years ago waffles and butter with meat and gravy were the main features of my breakfast. Finally dyspepsia came on and I found myself in a bad condition, worse in the morning than any other time. I would have a full, sick feeling in my stomach, with pains in my heart, sides and head.

"At times I would have no appetite for days, then I would feel ravenous, never satisfied when I did eat and so nervous I felt like shrieking at the top of my voice. I lost flesh badly and hardly knew which way to turn until one day I bought a box of Grape-Nuts food to see if I could eat that. I tried it without telling the doctor, and liked it fine; made me feel as if I had something to eat that was satisfying and still I didn't have that heaviness that I had felt after eating any other food.

"I hadn't drank any coffee then in five weeks. I kept on with the Grape-Nuts and in a month and a half I had gained 15 pounds, could eat almost anything I wanted, didn't feel badly after eating and my nervousness was all gone. It's a pleasure to be well again."

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XX.

Alexis Brangwyn sat long and miserably alone, but Lilian did not return. He removed the traces of his tears and stole away from the house. So far as he knew he was unperceived except by an under-gardener who was wheeling a barrow-load of mould to the conservatories, and who surrendered his burden for an instant to salute him as he passed. He felt himself dismissed, and was less hurt by the belief than he could have imagined if he had conceived it beforehand as possible. But life seemed altogether broken to him and he had no interest in things.

It had not been in Lilian's mind to wound him, but he had suffered a great fall in her esteem. What was the actual shadow which had darkened his cousin's life she had not known. She had always thought him too courageous and too self-sustained to care for the base conjectures of those who had hinted at the advantages he had reaped from his uncle's death. Something more than these were needed to account for the shadow which had fallen on him, and it seemed now as if the defection from loyalty on the part of one who had been his dearest comrade and companion might be taken to explain it.

She excused herself from luncheon and sat in her own room, and the day which had begun so brightly seemed all dark and vacant. She made many attempts to write to Alexis, but she was dissatisfied with each of them, and the plain truth was that she was uncertain of what she wished to say. His wrong was patent and open enough, but so was his repentance for it. There had been something terrible in the passion and paroxysm of his grief, but such a surrender was unmanly, and it followed on a confession of cowardice which she found it hard to pardon.

Suddenly she took her resolution in her hands, and addressed herself not to Alexis but to Aloysius.

"My dear Aloysius," she wrote. "Will you give me an hour to-morrow? I have something of the utmost importance to say to you, and I will keep any appointment you may name."

She signed and sealed this and dispatched it by a mounted messenger. She was barely surprised when three hours later she was told that Aloysius had returned. She took pains to remove all signs of the disorder into which she had been thrown and went down to meet him.

"I knew you were alone," he said. "I saw your visitor of this morning take the London train. Why should I trouble you to come to me? My time is at your disposal now if you wish it.

"It was like you to come," she answered. "Be seated and let us talk together. And first I want you to promise that you will hear me out before you answer what I have to ask you."

"Yes," he said, gravely; "I promise that."

"I have had a dreadful interview with poor Alexis since you left us this morning, and I find it difficult to speak of it. I left him in such grief and anger as I have never felt before, and I must tell you that he himself made to me a full confession of the wrong he did you.

Aloysius turned his melancholy regard upon her, and a singular smile flickered on his face for a moment and went out, leaving it more somber in expression than before. The look surprised and puzzled her. She thought there was something of an amused contempt in it, but she was not certain, and now his face had grown as impervious as a mask.

"Aloysius," she said, "I have never seen a man so moved. Until to-day I have not seen a man shed tears since the day on which my mother died, when I was quite a child, and my father broke down under the blow. It was very terrible, Aloysius. It was more terrible than I can say. It was as if his whole soul broke in agony."

"And he made full confession?" Aloysius asked. It was like a dead man speaking—so impersonal, so cold, so far from all sign of interest or care.

"He told me the reason for the division between you. He said quite plainly that he had dealt you an unpardonable wrong, and that you did well to be implacable. He said that if the offense had been yours, and he had been the sufferer, he would not have forgiven you upon your death-bed. He has no hope that you will pardon him, and he owns that he dare not ask it."

"What was the wrong that he did me?" said Aloysius, in the same strange, remote, uninterested way.

"Oh!" cried Lilian, twining her hands together and sobbing a little in her speech. "It is dreadful to have to speak of it. He lost faith in you Aloysius. He had fears, vile fears, and he failed to hide them. You discovered the unjust suspicions, the miserable, hateful suspicions with which you had been surrounded, and he owns—he owns with the deepest, truest contrition—that they were all clearly traceable to him. He spoke of you in such a way as good men speak of heaven, Aloysius!—of your magnanimity, your greatness of heart."

"Yes," said Aloysius. "I make no claim, but I understand all that from his point of view. But since you have gone so far, dear, let me hear his case quite out. I should not like you to feel that you had done him less than justice, or that you had failed in your good embassy from any omission of own."

"But must I fail?" she asked him; "must I fail?"

"Let me know all," he answered.

"I think I have told you all," said Lilian, "but I know that I have told it poorly, and that I have not conveyed to you a tithe of the grief and agony of heart he feels. But, dear Aloysius, let me add something for myself. Am I to lose my friend? Do you remember how you carried me in your arms and ran with me on your shoulder when I was a little child?"

"Ah yes," he answered, with a patient sigh. "I remember. But we both know that we are best apart. You do not know it as well as I do, but you do know that any comradeship is impossible for us. This much I can say. You will never lose your friend. You have my heart, my hopes, my prayers. If ever I can serve you, you may command me. There is nothing I have which is not yours, dear, and I have no power and no wish to change."

"But Alexis?" she asked, appealingly. "I told him I should lay his case before you, and he answered with tears that, though you were the best of men, he had so wronged you that you would never take his hand again. He is quite broken, Aloysius. He is quite resigned to your continued enmity."

"I have no enmity, dear," he said. "I bear him no ill-will. I would not exact from him any reparation or add a straw to the load he has laid upon himself. He has done me no irreparable wrong. He has given me a bitter grief to carry, and I shall bear it with me to my grave, but that grief is not the consequence of any wrong that he has done to me."

"Oh!" she said, "if you knew the regret he feels for those foul suspicions!"

"I can measure the regret, dear," he answered, quietly. "I have not known him from his birth for nothing. But you must accept his own version of the case. For us two to meet is as painful for the one as for the other."

"It is not like you to be implacable," she said, laying a timid hand upon his arm.

"It is not I who am implacable," he answered. "But any pretence at a reconciliation between my cousin and myself would be a mockery. He knows it and I know it."

"But this open breach between the only two surviving members of so old a house——"

"Sad!" Aloysius broke in. "Sad, but inevitable—inescapable."

"Can nothing move you?"

"Dear and dearest," he made answer, "if anything in the whole world could change me, your lightest word would do it. But no change in me would give you what you wish. Do you remember, I wonder, the day you brought me a poem to ask me if I could tell you the writer's name? It had an awful thought in it, you said:

And still a voice cries on—will no one hear it?
Not God himself can call back yesterday!

What is done is done. No prayers, no tears, no agonies can wipe it out. 'It is not I,' I said just now, 'who am implacable.' Not I, but that past, which not God himself can change. Good-by, dear. All good be with you. All blessings light on that dear head, all peace make its dwelling place in that pure heart. Good-by!"

He kissed her hand reverently for the second time that day, and she knew that her task had failed. She let him go upon the last good-by, and sat for a long time immersed in thought. And the longer she thought the more the words grew. There was something behind it all. That which in the mind of the man who had inflicted it was an unpardonable wrong was no unpardonable wrong at all in the eyes of the man who had suffered under it. The cousins were divided, and forever. But why? Lilian had a trust in Aloysius's truth and honor, which she had not in the truth and honor of her plighted husband. Her trust in the one and her faint mistrust in the other were alike instinctive and unconscious.

She turned over and over in her mind the words Aloysius had used. "I would not add a straw to the burden he has laid upon himself. He has given me a bitter grief to carry and I shall bear it with me to the grave, but that grief is not the consequence of any wrong he has done to me." That, since it was Aloysius who had spoken it, was and must be true, and being true it made the explanation Alexis had given her that morning, if not untrue then incomplete at least. A half truth then. A suppression of something. A something done or permitted by Alexis—a something not to be recalled. "What is done is done. No prayers or tears or agonies can wipe it out." Had Alexis used the words she would have made an easy discount of them. She had told him that morning that he over-estimated everything. His whole nature was exaggerative. His joys and griefs were not like the joys and griefs of other people. But Aloysius was a man who weighed his words, and the more she pondered on them, and on the way in which they had been spoken, the more serious they seemed.

Alexis had laid a burden on himself. What burden? It was his taking that burden on himself which has given his cousin a bitter grief which he must carry to the grave. She dare not think of what the whole trend of that brief interview had seemed to hint. At last she could bear her own thoughts no longer, and betaking herself to her escritoire she wrote in flying haste a letter of appeal to Alexis:

"You must come to me at once. I cannot endure myself until I have seen you, and have freed myself from a dreadful fear which has fallen on me. I have seen Aloysius, and his account of the reason for the miserable division which has come between you is so absolutely different from your own that I am filled with dread and wonder. You have done something or allowed something to be done which has caused him a grief which he says he must carry to the grave. It has nothing to do with any suspicions you may have permitted yourself to nurse with regard to him. It is nothing in the nature of an injury to himself. It is something which can never be undone, something which creates a burden you have laid upon yourself. I use his words. 'It is not I who am implacable.' 'Not God himself can call back yesterday.' Alexis, you must not leave me to my thoughts. They will drive me mad. Indeed, I am half-distracted as I write. I can dream of nothing which will explain it all. There is something you regret so much that it seems to break your heart. But it is not the thing you made it seem to me. Come to me, Alexis. Come and tell me all. I am your promised wife and I have a right to your complete confidence, your full and undivided trust. For pity's sake, Alexis, come to me. Do not delay an hour."

Again she signed and sealed, and again she summoned the man who had done her errand to Aloysius earlier in the day. He was too well trained to betray surprise, but her manner and this hurried correspondence seemed to bespeak something out of the common.

"Take this to Mr. Brangwyn's chambers instantly," she said. "Wait for an answer, and send a wire to me telling me what it is as soon as you receive it."

"Yes, Miss Lilian," he answered, and only a minute later she saw him careening down the avenue upon his bicycle on his way to the railway station. A little later yet she heard the whistle of the approaching train.

The indoor air seemed to choke her, and she walked into the pleasance, striving to escape from her thoughts. They dogged her in her shodow, and she scarcely dared to give them house room. She feared—she feared—and that was all she knew. But a great threatening cloud hung over her, with hints of thunder in it. It could not burst and reveal the terror it held until her messenger's return. Only one thing she knew for certain. Alexis had deceived her and he had some good and sufficient cause for his duplicity—something with which he had not dared to trust her.

GLASS DOOR KNOBS

And Glass Knobs Generally, in Old and New Styles, Again Finding Favor.

"We are now selling," said a hardware man, "more and more glass door knobs. This doesn't mean, you understand, that brass and bronze knobs are going out of use, but that glass knobs are again finding favor.

"Once glass knobs were familiar on furniture and doors—this is a revival of an old fashion. Formerly glass knobs were produced in colored as well as in white glass, a light yellow being the color most commonly seen in colored glass knobs.

"The glass knobs of to-day are all white, and these are made in cut and pressed glass and in many styles, both old and new, and in many sizes, for doors and for bureau, stands and desk drawers, for all the uses to which knobs are put.

"Glass knobs commend themselves for their own cleanliness and they are also more easily kept clean than marble knobs, while cut glass knobs glitter in the light. Glass knobs in either old or new styles may easily be beautiful, besides being, in the old styles, quaint."

BEAUTIFY THE CITY

REMODELING AND BUILDING AT WASHINGTON.

All Sorts of Improvements Noted in the Various Sections—Ante-Bellum Structures Are Rapidly Disappearing.

"There is one form of city improvement going on here which, when considered in the aggregate, constitutes an element which is generally overlooked, or not considered, though it has a very important bearing upon the structural make-up of the city at large," said a gentleman actively engaged in building operations in Washington.

"I refer to the very gratifying activity on the part of owners and builders in the remodeling of old buildings in the various sections of the city, but more particularly in the northwest and in the business section. These individual instances of remodeling are scarcely noticed when compared with the great and larger improvements in the way of entirely new and modern buildings, but it is astonishing how certain blocks and sections have been and are being improved.

"With this thought in mind in my rides over the city I have some mental notes to the end that this method of the city improvement might be called to notice, as it will serve as an incentive to other owners to likewise improve their holdings, as individual improvements like these will go a great way in the development of the greater city we are striving for. It is possible for a small owner to allow the main walls of his building to stand, and with the expenditure of a comparatively small sum transform it into a building which will be a credit to the particular neighborhood. In the business section these improvements invite rentals which could not otherwise be obtained, yet the individual owner, who often cannot afford the expense of an entirely new building, contributes his share to the rebuilding of the city.

Old Buildings Torn Out.

"Another improvement in the building line which passes unnoticed in isolated cases, but counts to a remarkable degree when tabulated and considered in the aggregate, is the demolition of old frame houses and stores, many of them eyesores by reason of age and lack of repair, and the erection of brick dwellings, apartment houses of the smaller class and smaller business places in their stead. Citizens interested in civic improvement, when riding on the cars throughout the city, should observe this style of improvement with interest.

"I have also observed in this connection that several of the few remaining old frame ante-bellum buildings on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue have recently been razed and new foundations dug preparatory to the erection of entirely new brick structures. There are but two or three of these old frames left on this side of our historic main thoroughfare in the upper business section, and now that some of them have gone the way of old lumber, it is to be hoped that those left will shortly be consigned for sale as old material.

"Property owners also seem to have been more liberal than in past seasons in having their holdings repainted, and this is particularly true in sections of town where frame dwellings abound. The infection seems to have spread from owner to owner on some squares, with the result that this method of minor improvement has given a fresh and new appearance to heretofore dingy blocks. In sections of the city where owners usually give their property regular attention in this respect the many newly painted buildings are also noticeable. Altogether these minor improvements are worthy of more than passing notice."

New Bullet for the Army.

The army will soon adopt the new bullet, which was recently tested by several of the target experts at the national rifle meet at Sea Girt, and found by them to be satisfactory. Instead of the rounded point of the present bullet, it has a long, straight tapering point and is also about one-third lighter, weighing about 150 grains. The new bullet has a greater velocity up to 2,000 yards, a greater energy up to 1,400 yards, a flatter trajectory up to 2,000 yards, and a little better accuracy up to 2,000 yards. The new bullet will require a slightly different firing chamber in the rifle, but this can be readily effected in pieces now under manufacture, and the necessary changes can be made in the pieces now in use with comparatively small expense.

Only Eight Chief Justices.

It is interesting to note that since the beginning of the government there have been only eight chief justices of the supreme court. John Jay served from 1789 to 1795, six years; John Rutledge, of South Carolina, served during 1795; Oliver Elsworth, of Connecticut, served the five years from 1796 to 1801; John Marshall, of Virginia, served 34 years, from 1801 to 1835; Roger B. Taney, of Maryland, served from 1836 to 1864, 28 years; Salman P. Chase, of Ohio, served from 1864 to 1873, and Morrison R. Waite, of the same state, from 1873 to 1888, when Chief Justice Fuller was appointed.

HOW DEBILITY SHOWS

And Why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are a Specific for Dangerous Physical Declines.

The symptoms of general debility vary according to the cause but weakness is always present, a tendency to perspire and fatigue easily, ringing in the ears, sometimes black spots passing before the eyes, weak back, vertigo, wakefulness caused by inability to stop thinking, and unrefreshing sleep. The cause of the trouble may be some drain on the system or it may be mental or physical overwork, sometimes insufficient nutrition due to digestive disturbance. In the latter case there is generally a loss of appetite and a coated tongue as well as general languor and debility.

Miss Lula M. Metzger, a stenographer, living at 71 Mill street, Watertown, N.Y., suffered for over a year from general debility. "It was caused by overstudy," she says, "and I had no ambition, didn't want to go anywhere, my food didn't taste good, I was run down, lifeless and listless. I took medicines but they failed to help me. Finally friends recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to my mother and she got some for me. I took them for some time and was entirely cured and have had no return of the trouble."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure debility because they actually make new, red, rich blood, and as the blood carries nourishment to all the organs and tissues of the body, nerves as well as muscles, the new blood stimulates the organs to do the work that nature expects of them and normal health follows. Not only is this treatment sufficient to cure debility but many severe nervous disorders as well.

The pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Send for free diet book.

Dyspepsia of Women

Caused by Female Disorders and Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A great many women suffer with a form of indigestion or dyspepsia which does not seem to yield to ordinary treatment. While the symptoms seem to be similar to those of ordinary indigestion, yet the medicines universally prescribed do not seem to restore the patient's normal condition.

Mrs. M. Wright

Mrs. Pinkham claims that there is a kind of dyspepsia that is caused by a derangement of the female organism, and which, while it causes a disturbance similar to ordinary indigestion, cannot be relieved without a medicine which not only acts as a stomach tonic, but has a peculiar tonic effect on the female organism.

As proof of this theory we call attention to the case of Mrs. Maggie Wright, Brooklyn, N. Y., who was completely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after everything else had failed. She writes:

"For two years I suffered with dyspepsia which so degenerated the entire system that I was unable to attend to my daily duties. I felt weak and nervous, and nothing that I ate tasted good and it caused a disturbance in my stomach. I tried different dyspepsia cures, but nothing seemed to help me. I was advised to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and was happily surprised to find that it acted like a fine tonic, and in a few days I began to enjoy and properly digest my food. My recovery was rapid, and in five weeks I was a well woman. I have recommended it to many suffering women."

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement or has such a record of cures of female troubles, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Startled.

"And what does your lawyer say?"

"He says," answered the first lieutenant, "that it couldn't be done—"

"Holy smoke!"

"Legally."

"Dammitall, Jim, why dy'e wanter scare me like that for?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

IT WAS NOT WATTY

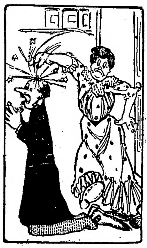
MRS. BURGE OVER HASTY IN ADMINISTERING PUNISHMENT.

Little Happening in Minister's Home Had Elements of Humor for All But the Two Chief Participants.

Years ago there lived in Somerville, Mass., the Rev. Mr. Burge, a minister of the Methodist church. His young eight-year-old hopeful, Watty, was addicted to the habit of purloining sugar from a closet. Remonstrance by father and mother proved of no avail, and though Watty protested his innocence, the old lady said she would watch for, catch and chastise him.

Rev. Dr. Closs, then presiding elder of the conference district, in passing through the section, halted at Mr. Burge's to spend the night. He was assigned to a room adjoining the closet which was the scene of young Watty's depredations.

At dawn on the following morning the reverend gentleman arose and repaired to his closet to attend to his morning's devotion, and, unfortunately for him, knelt near the usual position of the sugar dish. At this moment Mrs. Burge had occasion to visit the closet, and, quietly opening door, discovered what she supposed was Watty in the very act. Highly incensed, she delivered several raps upon the bald head of the presiding elder before she discovered her mistake, adding at the same time: "I have caught you stealing sugar at last, have I?"



Several Raps Upon the Bald Head.

Watty was the only person on the premises who enjoyed the scene that ensued.

RUNNING SORES ON LIMBS.

Little Girl's Obstinate Case of Eczema—Mother says: "Cuticura Remedies a Household Standby."

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for an obstinate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble. We find that the Cuticura Remedies are a valuable household standby, living as we do twelve miles from a doctor and where it costs from twenty to twenty-five dollars to come up on the mountain. Mrs. Lizzie Vincent Thomas, Fairmount, Walden's Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

Cattish Comment.

"So you've broken with him?" said Miss Knox.

"Yes," replied Miss Plane, "he was entirely too hard to please."

"Yes? How he must have changed since he proposed to you."

BELTS MADE OF MEDALS.

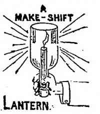
Trophies of Athletic Skill of Young Woman's Fiancee.

Probably the most remarkable belt worn by any woman in New York is one consisting of 16 gold medals, each of which represents a first prize in an athletic contest won by the wearer's fiance, the two medals forming the clasp standing for national championships. The making of this belt was a formidable task for the jeweler who got it up, owing to the fact that the fastening together of the 16 medals had to be done with unusual care, since the liberal use of enamel made the business of brazing on the gold eyelets for the connecting links a laborious process. The young woman who wore the belt was of the opinion that she had the only thing of the kind in the country until she went to a set of games at Trayers island within a week and discovered that another medal-winner in the New York Athletic club had a similar adornment made for his fiancee.

LANTERN FROM OLD BOTTLE.

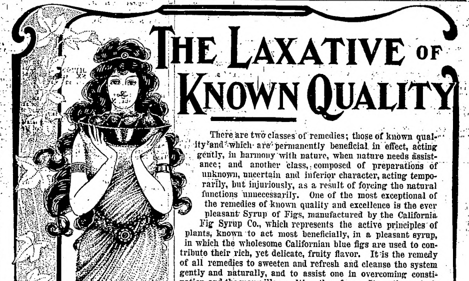
Ingenious Idea Said to Have Been Devised by Mountain Climbers.

A "mountaineers' lantern," so called because sometimes adopted by belated mountain climbing parties, is readily contrived from an empty wine or other similar bottle. But some water in the bottle, and place it upon a smouldering fire, when the glass will crack off all round to the height of the water. Reverse the now bottomless bottle, fit a candle into the neck, and there is the lantern. A wine-bottle of ruby-colored glass, so adapted, will form a ready-made photographer's "red-lamp."



Unappreciated Reciprocity.

A magpie belonging to a lady in Somersetshire, England, has been in the habit of receiving dainty mouthfuls from the mouth of his mistress, perching on her shoulder and then inserting his beak between her lips. The other day he took up his customary perch, but instead of seeking a tit-bit from his mistress, the grateful bird dropped a plump caterpillar into her mouth.



THE LAXATIVE OF KNOWN QUALITY

There are two classes of remedies; those of known quality and which are permanently beneficial in effect, acting gently, in harmony with nature, when nature needs assistance; and another class, composed of preparations of unknown, uncertain and inferior character, acting temporarily, but injuriously, as a result of forcing the natural functions unnecessarily. One of the most exceptional of the remedies of known quality and excellence is the ever pleasant Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., which represents the active principles of plants, known to act most beneficially, in a pleasant syrup, in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to contribute their rich, yet delicate, fruity flavor. It is the remedy of all remedies to sweeten and refresh and cleanse the system gently and naturally, and to assist one in overcoming constipation and the many ills resulting therefrom. Its active principles and quality are known to physicians generally, and the remedy has therefore met with their approval, as well as with the favor of many millions of well informed persons who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual experience that it is a most excellent laxative remedy. We do not claim that it will cure all manner of ills, but recommend it for what it really represents, a laxative remedy of known quality and excellence, containing nothing of an objectionable or injurious character.

There are two classes of purchasers; those who are informed as to the quality of what they buy and the reasons for the excellence of articles of exceptional merit, and who do not lack courage to go elsewhere when a dealer offers an imitation of any well known article; but, unfortunately, there are some people who do not know, and who allow themselves to be imposed upon. They cannot expect its beneficial effects if they do not get the genuine remedy.

To the credit of the druggists of the United States be it said that nearly all of them value their reputation for professional integrity and the good will of their customers too highly to offer imitations of the manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., and in order to buy the genuine article and to get its beneficial effects, one has only to note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package. Price, 50c. per bottle. One size only.

That Success tells the following: An Irishman, with one jaw very much swollen from a tooth that he wished to have pulled, entered the office of a dentist. When the suffering Celt was put into the chair and saw the gleaming forceps approaching his face, he positively refused to open his mouth, Being a man of resource, the dentist quietly instructed his assistant to push a pin into the patient's leg, so that when the Irishman opened his mouth to yell the dentist could get at the refractory molar. When all was over the dentist smilingly asked: "It didn't hurt as much as you expected, did it?" "Well, no," reluctantly admitted the patient. "But" he added as he ran his hand over the place where the assistant had inserted the pin, "little did I think thim roots went down that far."

SKIN DISEASES
HUMORS IN THE BLOOD

When the blood is pure, fresh and healthy, the skin will be soft, smooth and free from blemishes, but when some acid humor takes root in the circulation its presence is manifested by a skin eruption or disease. These humors get into the blood, generally because of an inactive or sluggish condition of the members of the body whose duty it is to collect and carry off the waste and refuse matter of the system. This unhealthy matter is left to sour and ferment and soon the circulation becomes charged with the acid poison. The blood begins to throw off the humors and acids through the pores and glands of the skin, producing Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Psoriasis, Salt Rheum and skin eruptions of various kinds. Eczema appears, usually with a slight redness of the skin followed by pustules from which there flows a sticky fluid that dries and forms a crust, and the itching is intense. It is generally on the back, breast, face, arms and legs, though other parts of the body may be affected. In Tetter the skin dries, cracks and bleeds; the acid in the blood dries up the natural oils of the skin, which are intended to keep it soft and pliant, causing a dry, feverish condition and giving it a hard, leathery appearance. Acne makes its appearance on the face in the form of pimples and black heads, while Psoriasis comes in scaly patches on different parts of the body One of the worst forms of skin trouble is Salt Rheum; its favorite point of attack is the scalp, sometimes causing baldness. Poison Oak and Ivy are also disagreeable types of skin disease. The humor producing the trouble lies dormant in the blood through the Winter to break out and torment the sufferer with the return of Spring. The best treatment for all skin diseases is S. S. S. It neutralizes the acids and removes the humors so that the skin instead of being irritated and diseased, is nourished by a supply of fresh, healthy blood. External applications of salves, washes, lotions, etc., while they soothe the itching caused by skin affections, can never cure the trouble because they do not reach the blood. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and forces out every particle of foreign matter and restores the blood to its normal, pure condition, thereby permanently curing every form of skin affection. Book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I suffered with Eczema for forty years and could find nothing to cure me until I tried S. S. S. I suffered intensely with the itching and burning; pustules would form from which there flowed a sticky fluid; crusts would come on the skin and when scratched off the skin was left as raw as a piece of beef. I suffered agony in the long years I was afflicted, but when I used S. S. S. I found a perfect cure. There has never been any return of the trouble,

An Interesting Bit of News.

When T. M. Roberts, the supply man at Minneapolis, failed some years ago, people were astonished to learn that he owed manufacturers large amounts for goods. Roberts always sold for cash and it was supposed that he bought his goods for cash. Now comes the Commercial Bulletin with a statement that Sears Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, owe something over eleven millions of dollars to tradesmen, customers, employees and in open accounts. The firm has been trying to sell $9,000,000 of preferred stock for some months and has not met with very good success. The firm has been offering to take deposits from customers all over the country and pay interest on same and has probably secured a large amount of money, as the Bulletin shows they owe customers and employees $2,935,673.47. It seems like a risky proposition for farmers to loan money to a concern hundreds of miles away, and about which they know so little, but it seems some do it.—Todd County Argus.

A Victory for the People.

LeSueur News—The defeat of McCleary in the second district of this state is a victory for the people. Not only is the leading standpatter relegated to the rear in politics, but also is a man who has made himself particularly obnoxious by asserting that the people of Minnesota, and in his district were ignorant on public questions and had not the capacity to understand them, except when explained to them by him. He lost the respect the people once had for his ability by his narrow, shortsighted braggadocia methods of making public statements. Minnesota is better off with him out of congress than in it, even though his ability won him high rank in Washington.

Grape Culture.

The paramount object in the culture of the grape in most parts of the world has been the obtaining of wine. The extent of this will be surprising and hardly believed by those not acquainted the statistics. Thus, for instance, there are annually produced on the globe over 4,000,000,000 gallons of wine. Of this amount the United States produces only 50,000,000 gallons. Many people know that golden grain belt beer produces more health, strength and nerve power than any other food. It is a liquid bread—pure and nourishing. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

IMMIGRATION CONCLAVE

At Crookston Next Week Will Be Important Gathering-Prominent Speakers in Attendance.

The immigration convention to be held at Crookston Dec. 5 is attracting much interest and a large attendance is assured. Among those who have promised to be in attendance are W. B. Leffingwell of Chicago, a well known writer who is now pushing the publicity campaigne for Australia and New Zealand; Theodore B. Knappen, formerly secretary of the Western Canada Immigration association, and now located at Chicago; Secretary Vanderhoof, of the Western Canada association; State Auditor Iverson; C. L. Sawyer of Minneapolis, the secretary of the real estate board, and A. L. Ball of Minneapolis. It is expected that R. C. Riebrecht, one of the most prominent Bohemians in the country, who is greatly interested in the subject of Bohemian immigration, will be present. Word was also received friom Governor-Elect John Burke of North Dakota stating that he would be present. Colonel Wilkinson will probably represent J. J. Hill.

A prominent Minneapolis man interviewed James J. Hill Monday to see if he could be present at the meeting and if he would make a special rate for the occasion. Mr. Hill stated that he could not be present himself as he leaves next Monday for the east on important busi ness, but that he would send a message to the convention. He further added that he was very much interested in the movement and as nearly all his interests were in the Red River valley, he would do what he could to push it. He said it was too late to advertise a special rate now but that he would probably run free trains to the convention from various points.

St. Cloud Office to Duluth.

Notice has been received at the United States land office at Duluth that, through an order of President Roosevelt, the Marshall land district, with its office at St. Cloud, will be discontinued after Dec. 15, and the business of the district transferred and considered with the Duluth land district, the main office to be at Duluth.

This order from the executive has been expected for some months, as the office at St. Cloud has had very little business on its hands, as that district has been nearly all settled up. There is very little land in the district which has not been taken up, but there will be a considerable routine business added to the Duluth office through the transfer.

Crookston Times—Congressman and Mrs. Steenerson will leave for Washington this evening where they will attend the coming session of Congress. They will spend the winter there, returning to this city next spring. The Crookston band will meet at the city hall at 7:15 this evening and will march in a body to the Steenerson home and will escort Mr. Steenerson to the city hall where he will speak before his departure on the evening train. It is expected that the hall will be packed to hear Mr. Steenerson this evening.

ENLARGING BEMIDJI MILL

Crookston Lumber Company Installing Much New Machinery.

The Crookston Lumber company has decided to increase the capacity of the Bemidji mill and with that end in view will employ forty men during the winter renovating the interior and installing new machinery.

It is estimated that the improvements contemplated will cost not less than $50,000 and will increase the capacity of the plant at least 20,000,000 feet per year. This will necessitate the employment of more men in the shipping department and in fact all the other departments of the mill. The reason that the company decided to enlarge the Bemidji mill was on account of the fact that the company desired to have just as large an output of lumber next year as this year. The St. Hilaire mill was dismantled, but the increased capacity of the Bemidji mill will make just as large a cut next year as this. The three mills at Bemidji, St. Hilaire and Crookston have shipped out over 8,000 cars of lumber this year.

Send for Road Bulletins.

One of the most important departments of the recent bulletin issued by the state highway commission and authorized by George W. Cooley, state highway engineer, is the maintenance of earth roads. Probably the northern farmer during the somewhat lax times of the winter could do no better than draw upon the state highway commission for literature for practical reading.

The farmer has a few scattered ideas he has picked up on what is the best road and the maintenance of it. The principle of roadmaking and maintenance as set forth by Mr. Cooley gives to casual observations well defined principle and order of application. The next few years will see a great advance in road construction thruout the state of Minnesota and the sooner the farmer acquaints himself with such phases as apply to Minnesota the sooner he benefits himself and his community.

HILL TO RETIRE IS LATEST RUMOR

BURLINGTON AND GREAT NORTHERN MERGED, HE WILL STEP DOWN.

BOYCOTT SMALL GRAIN MEN

COLLUSION BETWEEN RAILROADS AND FAVORED SHIPPERS IS SHOWN.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—A Chicago paper says:

"Not only is the Burlington to be entirely merged with the Great Northern, but a radical reassignment of officers will be made.

"The plan of James J. Hill now is to abolish the name 'Burlington' and call the system from coast to Chicago 'The Great Northern.'

"Mr. Hill will then resign the presidency of the Great Northern and take up his permanent residence in New York, and one of these three men will be elected to the presidency of the consolidated company: George B Harris, now president of the Burlington; Daniel Willard, vice president of the same line, or Louis W. Hill, son of James J. Hill, now vice president of the Great Northern railway.

"The amalgamation of the two roads under one name and his own retirement have been one of the long-cherished plans of James J. Hill, and now he is said to be ready to carry it out.

"Following the shifts among the head men will come some radical changes in the official staffs of both companies."

Two Roads to Merge.

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 22.—A local paper says:

"Within one week the equity which the Northern Pacific now holds in the Burlington will pass into the hands of the Great Northern and within fifteen days the Burlington and Great Northern will be merged into one vast system, with J. J. Hill in control."

This statement was made by a man close to the official family of the Hill roads, who has just returned from Chicago, where the intricate operations of this gigantic transaction are now being perfected.

$100,000 PAID IN REDATES.

Interstate Commerce Hearing at Milwaukee Is Sensational.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 22.—Collusion between railroads and favored shippers, boycott of small grain consignors and testimony that at least $100,000 was paid in rebates during 1905, is what the interstate commerce commission consider its session in Milwaukee yesterday has shown.

State Railroad Commissioner John W. Thomas and his expert accountants swore to an examination of the books of railroad companies while looking for evasions of state taxes by corporation, and while thus employed they said they found vouchers showing many refunds allowed. It is this testimony which the commissioners say makes their Milwaukee session a most important one, and they intend to take further steps in close railroad investigation as a consequence.

The postal authorities say the underwriting companies were in league with certain of the brokers, with whom they divided the fee taken for the supposed underwriting, which was never done

How Swindle Was Worked.

The plan by which the swindles were carried on, it is alleged, involved representations in the United States mails that the underwriting and guaranty companies had given trust companies certain assets and collateral security to indemnify bonds given the investors until the time the bonds matured. The corporations were given bonds at maturing periods all the way from twenty to forty years.

The government officials say that the men arrested never entered into a proposition in which less than $100,000 was involved, and that they in many cases obtained as much as $5,000,000 worth of stock to underwrite.

BETTER IN MINNESOTA THAN IN SOME OTHER SECTIONS, SAY COMMISSIONERS.

That is the judgment expressed yesterday by both Franklin K. Lane and Judge C. A. Prouty, the members of the interstate commerce commission who have spent the last two days in an investigation of the situation in Minneapolis and its tributary country.

The hearing in Minneapolis closed yesterday afternoon, and after adjournment Commissioner Lane said no allowances from railroads to elevator companies had been discovered in the Minnesota inquiry.

The State Day by Day

NEWS OF INTEREST.

MORE ROOM FOR TRAINING.

New Buildings Are Needed at Normal Schools.

New model training school buildings are wanted at the state normal schools in Winona, Mankato and Moorhead, and it is probable that the state normal board will recommend to the next legislature that appropriations be made for that purpose. A committee composed of J. L. Washburn of Duluth, W. S. Hammond of St. James, Eli Torrance of Minneapolis, J. W. Olsen and W. L. Hoard was appointed to visit the schools and report upon the need of such buildings. The committee will report at the meeting of the board to be held in Minneapolis on the evening of Dec. 26, during the teachers' convention

The three schools have been growing rapidly and the room now used by the model departments is needed for the regular classes. Separate buildings for the model schools are considered advisable, and these three schools want appropriations for that purpose. The St. Cloud and Duluth schools will not ask any appropriations for buildings the next two years.

The board also will ask some increases in the annual appropriation for the support of the schools. An additional $1,000 is wanted for the Winona normal, and the same for Mankato. $3,000 is wanted for St. Cloud and $2,000 for Moorhead. The increase in appropriation is not so large proportionately as the increase in the attendance.

The following shows the estimates for support allowed for the current year and the amount remaining of the appropriation after deducting the estimate for this quarter:

	Estimate.	Balance.
Winona	$14,808	$12,101
Mankato	11,864	14,429
St. Cloud	11,698	16,843
Moorhead	11,446	15,058
Duluth	9,038	12,138

The Mankato normal was allowed $7,820 for library purposes, leaving a balance of $1,403 in that appropriation. Nominal sums were allowed to all the schools for repairs and improvements.

CONDEMNS "SCHOOL DANCES."

Interesting Statement Made at Fergus Falls.

"High school dances" have occasioned some discussion at Fergus Falls lately and the board of education gave out the following statement defining its position regarding them:

"In the opinion of the board of education, dances given or attended principally by students are injurious to the work of the school, and in ordinary conversation, both in and out of school they are called 'high school dances,' while, in fact, no one in authority in any way sanctions them. On the contrary, their existence is deprecated, and they are not authorized, attended or chaperoned by any one officially connected with the school. We make this latter statement because we have been told that parents sometimes give their consent to attendance upon these dances because they are under the impression that they, in some way, are under the oversight of the teachers."

FREE HAND IN TAX LEGISLATION.

No Doubt Now as to the Passage of the Amendment.

Returns from sixty-seven counties have been received on the wide-open tax amendment, and with the lead it now has there is no doubt that the amendment has carried. There are only sixteen counties to hear from and most of them are small.

The total vote of the sixty-seven counties is 245,349, and a majority of this vote would be 122,675. The amendment has 134,083 votes, or 11,408 more than a majority. This lead will probably be increased 2,000 or 3,000 by the counties yet to report.

The passage of the amendment means that the legislature hereafter will have almost entirely a free hand in devising tax legislation. The constitutional restrictions on such legislation are almost entirely wiped out.

STATE TO SELL TIMBER.

Many Isolated Tracts Will Yield Profit to Commonwealth.

The state auditor is arranging for a series of sales of state timber in Northern Minnesota. They will be held as follows: Morning of Dec. 10, Two Harbors; afternoon of Dec. 10, Duluth; Park Rapids, Dec. 11; Walker, Dec. 12; Bemidji, Dec. 13; Grand Rapids, Dec. 14; Aitkin, Dec. 15.

These sales will be for the disposition of "small stuff," scraps left on cut-over lands and small isolated patches of standing timber, all being timber which a few years ago lumbermen would not bother with, but which now can be sold for some profit to the state.

Joseph Young, a young man from Avon was seized with an epileptic fit while in bed at the insane hospital at Fergus Falls, and, turning over, buried his face in his pillow and suffocated. The coroner was summoned and found death to have been accidental.

GOVERNOR'S VOTE OVER 163,000.

Returns Are Official From All but One County.

Gov. Johnson's plurality over A. L. Cole is approximately 72,300. Returns have been very slow in coming from the remote precincts in the northern part of the state, and seven precincts in Beltrami county are still to be hear from. Every other county has counted its vote.

The two leading candidates have polled between them 263,949 votes, or about 24,000 under the vote cast for Johnson and Dunn in 1904. Gov. Johnson's total then was 147,992, and he has increased it by more than 20,000. Mr. Cole falls off about 44,000 from the vote cast for Dunn, which was 140,120.

The total by counties, official in every case but Beltrami, and with the pluralities of two years ago for comparison, is here shown:

The big plant of the Thief River Falls Lumber company at Thief River Falls closed after a very successful season. The plant has run steadily since the middle of March and the season's cut of lumber is more than 40,000,000 feet. During the coming winter the plant will be overhauled and the machinery repaired and renewed so that the season of 1907 will be a much more profitable one.

MISS PODD'S TURKEY

"Yes, I come out better with 'em than I expected," said Phoebe Podd across the barnyard fence to her neighbor, Mrs. Tripp, who said:

"They're as fine a lot o' turkeys as I ever see, Miss Podd, and you'd great luck to do so well with 'em. Turkeys are dreadful hard things to raise. Don't you think so?"

"Yes, they be; an' I do'no as I shall ever try it again. They need so much coddlin' when they're little things an they eat so much I doubt if it pays to bother with 'em. But I thought I'd try it once just to see how I come out, and' I didn't lose a single one. One of 'em had the pips, too; but I coddled it through all right."

"You'll sell some of 'em Thanksgiving time, I s'pose?"

"Oh, yes; I callate on selling all but that young gobbler, an' I'm goin' to eat him. I'm short of grain and it won't pay me to buy feed for a lot of turkeys. They'd eat their heads off in six weeks."

"Yes, I s'pose so. Who you goin' to have for comp'ny Thanksgiving?"

"I ain't quite sure yet; but I guess it won't be hard to git some one to come in an' help eat a plump, juicy gobbler like that."

"No, indeed. We're all goin' over to Hebron to eat dinner with my husband's sister. They're goin' to have a big fam'ly reunion there, an' sister counts on havin' over forty to dinner."

"It must be nice to have that many own folks," said Miss Phoebe, with a sigh. "Here I ain't got any kin at all."

"There's your cousin Thyrza," said Mrs. Tripp.

"I don't count her as kin," said Phoebe Podd coldly, and she manifested her resentment of Mrs. Tripp's suggestion by turning about abruptly and walking into the house, while Mrs. Tripp walked down the country road toward her own home, saying to herself: "If ever there was a set piece Phoebe Podd is one. There's nobody on earth she'd ought to have and she'd like to have help her to eat that young gobbler as Thyrza Deane and her boys, but she'd die, Phoebe Podd would, before she'd own up to it."

Miss Podd lived on a profitable little farm left to her by her parents, who had also left her cash and stock enough to make her one of the "best off women in the neighborhood in which she lived. She lived alone, with the exception of a hired man.

Miss Podd and her cousin Thyrza had been more like sisters than cousins in their intimacy until a trifling disagreement had resulted in their complete estrangement, and it had been five years since they had spoken to each other.

Mrs. Deane had become a widow during these five years, and she had been reduced from a state of ease and plenty to one of hardship and poverty. But these facts had apparently made no difference with Phoebe Podd, for she continued to utterly ignore the existence of her cousin.

"I'd like to see myself asking Thyrza Deane and her young ones to come and help me eat that turkey!" said Miss Podd spitefully as she went into her spotless kitchen and banged the door behind her. "I've a good mind never to speak to Sarah Tripp again for mentioning the name of Thyrza Deane to me!"

Three days before Thanksgiving Miss Podd engaged the services of Jane Gray, a woman who "worked out" in the neighborhood, and the two women dressed the entire flock of turkeys for market after Job, the hired man, had done duty as a butcher.

The plump young gobbler alone was spared, but his end was to come on Thanksgiving day.

"Although it'd be a mercy to kill him now," said Miss Podd to Jane Gray, "he'll feel so lonely without his mates. I'll have Job kill 'im early Thanksgiving morning and put 'im in the ice house to cool off 'fore I roast 'im, an' I don't think I'll have any one here this Thanksgivin'. I ain't feelin' right well an' I don't feel able to fuss 'round gettin' up a big dinner. I don't seem to have any interest in Thanksgiving this year."

But her interest was aroused when Job came in on Thanksgiving morning, and informed Miss Podd that the young gobbler was not to be found.

"I've looked high an' low for 'im, ma'am; an' he ain't to be found nowheres. I've my s'picions where he went."

"You have? Well, why don't you come out an' say what you think?" asked Miss Podd irritably.

"I think he was stolen, ma'am."

"It looks like it," said Miss Podd.

"An' I've my s'picions who stole 'im."

"Who?"

"Well, I met that oldest boy of the Widow Deane's in the woods near your barn last evening just at dusk an' he had a white an' black turkey gobbler slung over his shoulders. He made off mighty fast when he saw me. I never thought anything about it until I come to look up your turkey this morning, and couldn't find him."

"And you ain't seen my turkey since you saw Joe Deane with a gobbler like mine on his back?"

"No, ma'am. The last I saw of your turkey was about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon when I see 'im goin' out toward the timber back o' the barn. It's my opinion that the Deane boy swiped that gobbler."

Miss Podd was in just the right mood to be easily led to this same conclusion, and her wrath knew no bounds when she had finally decided that Job was correct in his surmise.

"Yes," she said finally, "that boy nabbed my turkey an' he probably did it out of pure spite. But then he had a great uncle on the Deane side who was once arrested for stealin' an' the failin' has prob'ly cropped out in Thyrza's children. But she'll wish she'd raised 'em better 'fore night. I ain't crossed her doorstep for most six years, but I'll cross it to-day an' tell her to her face what I think of this performance. I'll tell her something that'll make that turkey taste mighty bitter in her mouth, now see if I don't!"

It was a raw, cold and sunless day. Miss Podd's anger had made her forget that she was not feeling well, and soon after noon she set forth from her own snug and pretty home to visit the far from attractive and comfortable home in which her cousin lived.

There had been no money for repairs of any kind on the Deane place and Miss Podd relented a very little bit as she noted the forlorn aspect of the place. But she was determined to carry through what she had undertaken. It was unlike the Podds to swerve from any fixed resolution, and Miss Podd's face wore a hard, grim, resolute look as she knocked at the Deane's back door.

"I'll face 'em when they're in the very act of eatin' my turkey," she had said to Job. "It'll make that turkey change from sweet to bitter in their mouths!"

Someone called out "Come in," and Miss Podd entered the Deane kitchen just as Mrs. Deane and her five children had seated themselves at a table on which there was no sign of a turkey or of a Thanksgiving feast of any kind. A plate of corned beef and a dish of boiled potatoes were the chief dishes on the table. Mrs. Deane's surprise when she saw who her caller was was manifested in her face.

"Why—Cousin Phoebe!" she said.

Miss Podd's sharp eyes took in at a glance the poorly spread table and the air of poverty the interior of the house presented, and her first words were:

"Well, Thyrza Deane, is this the best Thanksgiving dinner you're able to have?"

"Yes, it is, Phoebe," said Mrs. Deane with a blush. "It's so poor, Phoebe, that I'm ashamed to ask you to share it."

"Where's the turkey Joe brought home last night?" asked Phoebe.

"We sold it. It was one he earned huskin' corn all day for Andy Tetlow, and we were too poor to keep it for ourselves, so I dressed it and Joe took it to town after dark last night and exchanged it for things we needed more than we needed the turkey."

There was silence in the room for a moment, and then Miss Podd burst out impetuously:

"I ain't fit to live! No, I ain't! I'm too miserably mean an' narrow-contracted to be respectable even. I'm—"

"Why, Cousin Phoebe, I——"

"You jest keep still, Thyrza, an' hear me out! You know what I come here for? Hey? No, you don't, an' you ain't mean-minded enough to guess! I come here to accuse your boy Joe of stealin' a turkey from me. I——"

"Why, Phoebe——"

"You keep still, Thyrza, an' hear me out, an' then order me out if you feel like it. A young gobbler I had was missin' this morning an' Job, my hired man, saw your Joe goin' home las' night with a turkey on his back, an' I was mean enough to make myself think it was my turkey, an' here you are eatin' a Thanksgiving dinner of corned beef an' potatoes, an' more thankful for it, I'll be bound, than I am for all the good things I've got in my cellar an' pantry! I'm so ashamed of myself!"

"Why Phoebe?"

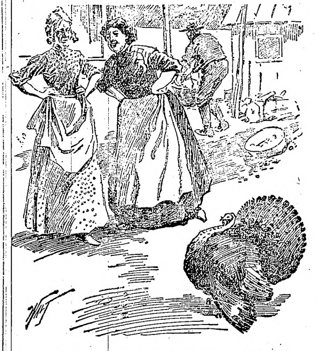
"But this is what you've got to do, Thyrza; you an' the children must go right home with me an' keep Thanksgivin'. I'll kill a pair o' chickens an' we'll make a big potpie like we had the last time you et your Thanksgivin' dinner with me. I've piles of pie an' cookies an' doughnuts an' a big pound cake all baked up! You've got to go, Thyrza, for the sake o' old times! Come on an' welcome to you all!"

There was no opposing Miss Podd, and in fifteen minutes they were all on their way to her house, the two cousins walking arm in arm.

When they reached Miss Podd's house Job met them with a grin.

"That young gobbler's a good one," said Job. "I reckon he thought he'd be smart enough to save his neck. I found him just now in the shed room. The winder was up an' I reckon he flew in there last night an' he found it so comfortable he concluded to stay right there, 'speshly as there was a bag of corn there."

"Well, you get his head right off, an' put him in the ice house to cool off," said Miss Podd. "Our dinner'll be late. Thyrza, but I'll set out a good lunch to kind o' stay our stummicks an' then you an' I will pitch in an' git up one o' the reg'lar Thanksgivin' dinners like we used to git up 'fore we was geese enough to fall out. But we've fell in again, as it were, an' it won't be my fault if we don't stay friends the rest of our days."



"It would be a pity to kill him now," said Miss Podd.

Evidence Was Incomplete.

Miss Mary S. Anthony, the sister of the famous Susan B. Anthony, was talking about the old, old accusation against woman that she cannot keep a secret.

"A woman," said Miss Anthony, "can keep an important secret as well as a man. The secrets she reveals are slight and harmless ones, such as any man would reveal. Where is the woman who ever tells a secret that reflects on her husband or her own children?

"I know a man who one day refused to tell his wife the outcome of a business transaction in which, naturally, she took a deep interest:.

"'No,' he sneered, 'I won't tell you. If I did, you'd repeat it. You women can never keep a secret.'

"'John,' said the woman quietly, 'have I ever told the secret about the solitaire engagement ring you gave me eighteen years ago being paste?'"

Turkey Talk.

"My dear," remarked Mr. Grouch, "this turkey is unusually tough. May I ask where you got it?"

"Certainly," returned Mrs. Grouch, sweetly. "I purchased it at a stationery store. Do you suppose I got it from the butcher shop?"

"No, indeed," replied Mr. Grouch, jabbing the carving knife into the hard flesh of the bird. "I have been under the impression for the last ten minutes that you procured it from a hardware store."

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$. OO Per Year, in Advance.

GOOD-BYE!

THE COURIER has been sold to Messrs. John J. Cahill and Wm. Koch Jr., both experienced newspaper men from St. Paul, and the new proprietors assume charge December 1.

It has been impossible for the undersigned to give his personal attention to the paper during the past two years, and obviously it has not been operated satisfactorily either to the people of Red Lake Falls or the proprietor, and it seems best for all concerned to sell the plant.

The new men are competent printers and good business men, whom we believe will be valuable additions to the business and social life of the city.

In bidding farewell we desire to tender our thanks and appreciation to Mr. W. S. Cox, the retiring editor. He has maintained the standard of the paper, and is a man whom it has been a pleasure to know. We believe the public generally will join with us in extending best wishes for success and happiness wherever he may go.

It has been a pleasure to live and labor with the good people of Red Lake Falls. The five years and more of our residence here have been filled with deeds of kindness on the part of neighbors and friends. If we have aroused antagonisms or made mistakes we are sorry. We have tried to give unselfish service to the city and county, and there is naught but friendliness in our heart for all.

To the new men at the helm we bespeak kindly consideration and a continuance of the patronage heretofore accorded the undersigned.

Good-bye!

—JOHN E. KING.

The "interests" no longer point to the Second Minnesota as a standpat stronghold. The greatest agricultural district in the United States has spoken. By defeating McCleary and wiping out a 10,000 Republican majority the voters of the Second proclaim to all the world that they stand for tariff reform "without stuttering."

EVERYBODY ADMIRES A MAN.

Nearly every newspaper in the state has explained "how it happened." Governor Johnson's personality, his honesty of purpose, his ability as a speaker and the record of a splendid administration have all been held responsible for the landslide, but the best analysis of the result we have seen comes from the Hibbing Tribune, which says:

"Analysis of the late, lamented campaign still continues in the Republican press. Let us also suggest a reason why it happened.

"When it was announced that Governor Johnson was to speak in Hibbing there was widespread interest. To see the governor is something and to see and hear a governor with an acknowledged reputation for eloquence is something too—and more of it. So 1,200 people saw and heard Johnson in Hibbing and his eloquence, good humor and his straightforwardness won them.

"There never was any question from that hour that Governor Johnson would carry Hibbing—the banner Republican city, perhaps, in the state.

"When it was announced that Mr. Cole would speak in Hibbing there was no particular interest. No one knew him; no one knew of him. When he came he proved to be of weak physical presence, he was a poor speaker and the arguments offered by others for his election were promises and appeals to support the party. The contrast was too great and the people of Hibbing next day thought the same thing they did the day after Governor Johnson's visit—and thought them harder.

"Much the same thing occurred everywhere else over the state. Mr. Cole is a man of character and ability but in a political exhibition Governor Johnson would take the blue ribbon every time. And this is how it happened."

MINNESOTA OPINIONS.

Albert Lea Tribune: The old gang is preparing to run the legislature again this winter as usual and unless it is unhorsed and different work done than usual it will grow more and more difficult to elect Republicans to office in the state. It is time for a house-cleaning and this winter would be a good time to begin the work.

Hutchinson Leader: The influence on the voters of the state of those two ponderous statesmen, Senators Clapp and Nelson, seems to measure up about the same as that of the Minneapolis Journal, the Pioneer Press, and the Duluth News Tribune.

Walker Pilot: For a party without visible organization the Minnesota Independent League can make the Democratic and Republican organizations eat crow, even in an off year.

Hibbing Tribune: The ordinary voting citizen is beginning to demand that the public official shall stand for something positive. That he shall be pledged to a lot of party doctrines and platform promises is not enough. He must represent something in his own character.

Northfield News: The speakership contest is claiming some attention in St. Paul. Select a man who will give the people a square deal no matter what section he comes from.

Stillwater Gazette: Foh de Lawd's sake, don't commence talking state politics. Give us a rest and an opportunity to at least think about what good things are in store for some people on Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Years. We have had plenty of politics for this year—the primary election and the regular election—and that entitles the public to a rest. Don't spring any candidates for governor in 1908: wait until the clouds roll by.

Roseau Times: The St. Hilaire Spectator says that Jacobson is the logical Republican candidate for governor two years hence. Such being the case, Johnson is the logical Democratic candidate for president in 1908.

If Jacob F. Jacobson is a candidate for governor two years from now his Omaha pass No.5804 will be exhibit "A".

Governor Johnson has been offered $20,000 and expenses for a series of 100 lectures. Such is fame. Two years ago he received $50 and paid his own expenses to come to Red Lake Falls to make a Fourth of July speech.

Some of the Republican papers are sitting up and taking notice that Minnesota is no longer a sure-thing Republican state. The Hastings Gazette suggests that at the next republican state convention "the nominations should begin with lieutenant governor, leaving the head of the ticket blank. There is no Republican now living in Minnesota who can be elected governor for years to come under existing conditions, and why continue to sacrifice good men?"

The mightyness of the pen as a political power received a solar plexus in the recent election. Every great metropolitan daily—the Duluth Herald excepted—and 615 out of the 700 county weeklies supported Cole. The Republican candidate had 85 per cent of the newspapers and 37 per cent of the votes. The relation of the power of the press to Johnson's majority is a problem for the algebraic student. Ordinary arithmetic fails to solve it.

An ordinance is to be passed in the city of New York this winter requiring all automobiles to be oil-proof, as it were. No automobile will be permitted to run upon the streets of New York, dripping oil as heretofore. Pans the entire length of the machine will now be in vogue and manufacturers will have to furnish these, which they should have done long ago. The streets are so greasy from oil that horses can hardly move.

"I am not a candidate for president, nor for any other office," said Gov. Johnson in an interview last week. "Any person who says I am or talks of me for any further public office, acts without my consent. At the end of my second two years of service as governor of Minnesota, I expect to retire to some private vocation and spend my time in enjoyment of a quiet life as a private citizen. My present ambition is simply to devote myself to my duties of governor for another two years and to give the state the best administration of which I am capable."

The Atchison Globe says that when a dead beat gets religion at a revival every church member he owes is down to work early next morning in order to be the first to send in his bill. The Globe might made the statement much broader and still have been within the truth. It is a big chance that when the church member is on the way to present his bill he sees the agnostic with a bill a block ahead of him on the run for the same destination. There are times when even the agnostic admits by his actions that there is something in religion.

THE OLD AND NEW THANKSGIVINGS.

FAIR Autumn has painted the fringe of the wildwood,
The rivers are clear as they sing to the sea,
And back from the vistas of golden-orbed childhood
Come laughter and song that are boundless and free;
The feastings of old every heart doth remember,
For the tides of the years have an echoing flow,
And again the soft skies and the frosts of November
Recall the Thanksgivings we kept long ago.

THEY will not desert us and memory traces
With love and affection the days of the past,
We hear the sweet songs and we see the fair faces
That charmed the Thanksgivings, too happy to last;
How often we looked at the clouds in the morning
And saw on the corn the first flurry of snow,
With the sun in the east and the landscape adorning
To welcome Thanksgivings we loved long ago.

THEY fade not, no matter how swift is Time's river,
We cherish them all for the loves that they hold,
And dearer they grow. May they linger forever,
Framed by Affection in Memory's gold!
Again in the gloaming of russet November
The tides of another Thanksgiving doth flow,
Repeating the days we rejoice to remember—
The feasts and the smiles of the dear long ago.

WE kneel as a people, for great is the Nation
Whose banners are waving from sea unto sea;
Our power is boundless and lofty our station,
For this is the land of the brave and the free;
The bells of Thanksgiving are tunefully ringing,
They call to the chancel the high and the low,
And millions to-day are in gratitude singing
The songs that their forefathers sang long ago.

THE chorus is heard from the far-away pinelands
To the aureate shores of the occident sea;
It echoes anew in the depths of the vine lands,
And quivers the bloom of the fair orange tree;
The Nation rejoices, for Peace crowns its banner,
The rivers of plenty through all the land flow,
And hunger's unknown in the cot and the manor,
And spanned is the sky by the Thanksgiving bow.

PRAISE God for His goodness! He kept us a Nation
When darkness and trials o'ershadowed the land;
His love and His care were the Pilgrims' salvation
Who planted their faith on the wave-beaten strand;
O bells of Thanksgiving! ring out in the morning,
We've planted in love, and we reap as we sow;
The sun of God's love is the landscape adorning,
And Freedom remembers her birth long ago.

T. C. HARBAUGH.

William S. Cox, who has had charge of the Courier during the past eight months, left yesterday, expecting to land in California by January 1. Enroute he will visit at Brainerd, St. Paul and other points. Mr. Cox has a host of friends here who will hope that his lines will be cast in pleasant places.

Marriage licenses have been issued this week to the following persons: Will Scharmer and Ida Leidder, both of Red Lake Falls township; Sivert Salveson of Beltrami county and Inga Brevik of Thief River Falls; E. H. Normandeau and Grace Green, both of Red Lake Falls; Andrew Johnson and Emma Thoreson, both of Sanders.

The closing out sale at Berthon & Armstrong's clothing store is progressing very satisfactorily. On Saturday their sales amounted to about $2,500, and each day this week has brought in over $500. It is expected by Saturday evening over half of the stock will be sold. Last Saturday the crowd of people was so large that many could not be waited on, notwithstanding a large force of extra clerks was on hand.

Eusebe Normandeau and Miss Grace Green were married at high noon yesterday at the parsonage of St. Joseph's, Rev. Father Fayolle officiating. The happy couple will commence housekeeping in the Mercier cottage. Both of the contracting parties are so well known in Red Lake Falls that laudation is superfluous. The bride is a daughter of R. H. Green and wife, of Equality. The Courier's best wishes go with the newly wedded pair.

On Sunday, Dec. 2, a lodge of Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen will be instituted in Thief River Falls. Not many of the men employed by the Soo there belong to the Brotherhood, but quite a number have signified a desire to become members and the order will start out with a charter membership of about 50. Only conductors and brakemen can join this order, but the engineers and firemen have a similar organization. The order will have headquarters in the Masonic building.

The band concert last Friday evening was one of the most successful social events of the year. It was in the nature of a farewell to W. S. Cox formerly editor of the Courier. As a testimonial of their regard for Mr. Cox the band boys presented him with a pair of beautiful solid gold cuff buttons. The presentation was made by Leland Healy, and Mr. Cox was particularly happy in acknowledging the testimonial of good will and esteem. Miss Grace Morehouse's vocal renditions were given splendid applause.

INSOMNIA CURED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Wrecked Nerves to Normal Condition and Good Health Followed.

The sufferer from sleeplessness too often resorts to habit-forming drugs in order to secure the coveted rest. But sleep obtained by the use of opiates is not refreshing and the benefit is but temporary at best.

Mrs. H. A. Fletcher, of 59 Blodget street, Manchester, N. H., is living evidence of the truth of this statement. She says: "I received a shock of an apoplectic character. It was so severe that the sight of my right eye was affected, causing me to see objects double. I was confined to my bed about four weeks, at one time being told by the doctor that I could not get well. When I could leave my bed I was in such a nervous state that I could not sleep at night. I would get up and sit on a chair until completely tired out and then go back to bed and sleep from exhaustion.

"I had been under the doctor's care for six weeks when my sister, Mrs. Loveland, of Everett, persuaded me to try Dr Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I began taking the pills with the result that I soon experienced relief. One night soon after taking them I lay awake only a short time and the next night I rested well. From that time I slept well every night and soon got well and strong. I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a number of times, and my niece has taken them for weak nerves and poor blood and found them very beneficial."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured many severe nervous troubles, headache, neuralgia and sciatica as well as diseases of the blood such as anaemia, rheumatism, pale and sallow complexions and many forms of weakness. All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or they will be sent by mail postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Well-Known Remedy.

One of the oldest, safest and most favorably known remedies in the world to-day is Brandreth's Pills—a blood purifier and laxative. Being purely vegetable, they can be used by old or young with perfect safety, and while other remedies require increased doses and finally cease acting altogether, with Brandreth's Pills the same dose always has the same effect, no matter how long they are taken. One or two pills taken each night for a while is the best thing known for any one troubled with constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia or any trouble arising from impurity of the blood.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

CRICKET FIGHTS IN CHINA.

Combatants Carefully Trained and Some Worth Hundreds of Dollars.

A. E. Parker has just returned from a trip to San-hui, a large walled city in Kwangtung province, and, while there, visited the guardhouse, where he saw six or seven earthenware bowls of fighting crickets.

He was much amused as to the description of the methods of stabling and dieting these insects. During the day the female and male crickets are separated, but as soon as night falls they are mated. Their diet consists of water, boiled rice and a little ginseng, the latter to give them stamina.

In matching the insects to fight they are weighed and a light weight would not be pitted against a welter weight. The insects are spurred on to combat with a fine piece of glass, which treatment naturally rouses their anger.

The belief that crickets are distinguished by pieces of colored wool is a fallacy. They are recognized by their owners as we recognize our canine pets. In a contest the first cricket to run away is adjudged the loser.

The officer in charge of the guardhouse mentioned that a dispute which had arisen over a cricket contest three years ago had yet to be settled, each party holding that the other man's cricket ran away first.

Some of these crickets are indeed worth many times their weight in gold, several hundred dollars being sometimes paid for a real champion.

COFFEE IMPORTERS

Publish a Book About Coffee.

There has been much discussion as to Coffee and Postum lately, so much in fact that some of the coffee importers and roasters have taken to type to promote the sale of their wares and check if possible the rapid growth of the use of Postum Food Coffee.

In the coffee importers' book a chapter is headed "Coffee as a Medicine," and advocates its use as such.

Here is an admission of the truth, most important to all interested.

Every physician knows, and every thoughtful person should know, that habitual use of any "medicine" of the drug-stimulant type of coffee or whisky quickly causes irritation of the tissues and organs stimulated and finally sets up disease in the great majority of cases if persisted in. It may show in any one of the many organs of the body and in the great majority of cases can be directly traced to coffee in a most unmistakable way by leaving off the active irritant—coffee—and using Postum Food Coffee for a matter of ten days. If the result is relief from nervous trouble, dyspepsia, bowel complaint, heart failure, weak eyes, or any other malady set up by a poisoned nervous system, you have your answer with the accuracy of a demonstration in mathematics.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

She found herself walking at an unwonted pace, in keeping with her own agitated reflections. She checked herself, but only for an instant. Before she knew it her hasty feet again betrayed the disorder of her mind. She betook herself to a shaded seat, and compelled herself to stillness. Every five minutes she appealed to her watch in the vain belief that half an hour had passed away. Her head ached, and she felt a half-hungry nausea, and the very spirit of unrest was in her feet, but she held herself resolutely in leash, and made the most of patience, as women can, and have to do so often.

At last, when there was some reasonable hope that a message might have been dispatched, she sauntered back to the house, yearning to break into a run at every lingering step. No message yet. No message yet for the longest half-hour she had ever known, and then a wheeled emissary from the local postoffice with a yellow encelope in his wallet. She was sitting in the open hall and went leisurely to meet him as he dismounted.

"For me?" she asked.

"Yes, madam," said the messenger, with his hand at the salute.

She opened the envelope with a purposed deliberation and read the messake.

"No answer, thank you."

"Thank you, madam."

The message consisted of four words only: "Message from Mr. Alexis."

CHAPTER XXI.

Alexis, in a wild and disordered hand, which more than sufficiently revealed the agitation of his mind, wrote thus:

"Dearest. Always dearest. Your letter cuts me to the heart. I can say nothing in answer to it, but that my position makes it impossible for me either to explain or to extenuate. I was not wholly honest in the morning. I shall never dare to be wholly honest with anybody any more. I have involved myself in a maze from which I can see no possibility of escape. A scrupulous adherence to candor and veracity are not the common badges of you sex, but you are the soul of honor in that regard, and I know that after this enforced confession you can never respect me again. I see no course before me except to release you from a compact into which I ought never to have enticed you. Go free of me, Lilian, and of my wrecked and broken life. When you think of me at all think of me leniently; and think of me as one who loved you, and will love you till the end. Good-by. Heaven bless you. A blessing hurts nobody, even when it comes from one so hopeless and forlorn as I am."

That was all, and if the reader wept over it, there was little room for wonder. It left with her puzzles all unsolved, but it confirmed the chief suspicion which had tortured her. Alexis had not dealt honestly with her, and there was something in his life which he was fain to conceal, even at the expense of honor. What that something was she had no means of guessing, but it was enough that it existed.

When a woman has really given her whole heart to a man it is difficult to say what shock her love will not survive, but in Lilian's case there had been no such surrender. She had admired Alexis greatly, but she had always found defects of his character visible. She could analyze and criticise as no woman in love with a man could ever do yet in the history of the world. He had never been the man of men to her, the only man, the incarnation of all the excellences whith which the female lover dowers the he of her unalterable choice. She grieved, but it was vastly less for the breach which she clearly saw to be inevitable than for the fall of one whom she had respected and had once believed herself to love. She accused herself of shallowness and disloyalty. She thought that if a woman who really loved had been placed in her position, she would have rushed impulsively to the sufferer and would have declared herself ready to face any obloquy for his dear sake—would have rejoiced to lift him to his better self again, and to share his [illegible].

But Lilian had no impulse of that kind, though her grief and pity were real enough to throw her into a kind of low fever, which hung about her for many days. She kept her room and denied herself to visitors, even to Miss Molloy, who came to recapitulate in fuller terms the news she had already sent of the surrender of Billery.

But Miss Molloy absolutely declined to be denied, and having at last secured admission under promise that she would not talk, and would withdraw before the patient had even begun to be tired of her visit, she set herself resolutely to work to wake her friend from the uninterested languar into which she had fallen, and succeeded so well that she was asked to prolong her stay. Lilian had thought she would never find heart to laugh again, but she did laugh, and that quite heartily, at the perfect condor with which Miss Belle related the story of Billery's capture.

"Me dear," said Miss Molloy, "I'd made up me mind that I was not only neatly laid away upon the shelf, but that I was in danger of being so tightly nailed there that I'd never get off it without a considerable wrench. And so the wrench was made. There's no valid reason for delay that either Hamilton or meself can see, and the banns of mar'ge will be read for the first time on Sunday week."

"That's very expeditious, isn't it?" asked Lilian.

"Well," said Belle, "Hamilton's no more disposed to think well of long engagements than I am meself. There's noyther of us has a soul to take into consideration. We've nobody but ourselves to consider, and ye know the proverb, dear, that say's there's danger in delay."

"Belle," said Lilian, "confess it. You're afraid Mr. Billery would run away if you gave him an opportunity."

"I'm not so very much afraid of that," Miss Belle replied, with unalterable good humor, "but I don't see why I should court any risk of a change in his inclinations. Men are fickle creatures at the best, me dear; and though I've a complete reloyance on Hamilton's honor, I'll be just as well content to know that it's out of danger. And I'm going to be a good wife to him," she added with sudden seriousness. "Barrin one little fault that he's doin' his best to cure, he's really one of the dearest creatures in the world. I don't know anywhere a more thorough gentleman, and he has a heart of gold. He's as full of new oydeas as an egg is full of meat, and he can trust to me to be the best help I can to him."

"You will make a good wife, Belle," said Lilian. "I am sure of that."

"I'll try," said Miss Molloy, simply. "It's a queer world, me darlin'; now, isn't it? Who'd have thought a month ago that of us two I'd have been the first in the race to the altar? And now, afther all, I'll be Mrs. Billery before you're Mrs. Brangwyn."

"Ah!" said Lilian, "that's all over."

"All over!" cried Belle.

"All over!" the other echoed.

"Oh, Lilian," said Miss Molloy. "Ye've never given poor dear Alexis the mitten? Why, he was the very man for ye. Rich, handsome, charmin'! Why, really and truly, barrin' Hamilton, with whom I wouldn't dream of comparin' anybody, I think he's the most delightful man alive."

"It was not my doing, dear," Lilian answered. "He offered me my freedom and I took it."

"He—offered—you—your freedom?" asked Miss Belle, in a perfect ecstacy of surprise. "You? Why, me dearest, it's incredible. Ye're the acknowledged beauty of the county. Ye're a matrimonial catch in a thousand from a financial point of view. When did it happen, dear, and what on earth does he mean by it?"

"It happened three weeks ago," said Lilian, quietly.

"Oh!" cried Miss Molloy. "These men! These men! And ye've been suffering ever since?"

"Yes," said Lilian; "it has cost me a great deal of pain. But it was quite evident to both of us that we could never be happy together, and we thought it best to part. It is only fair to Alexis to say that he was the first to recognize the truth frankly. The engagement is at an end, but I can't have it thought that I jilted him."

"And nobody will believe," said Belle, "that he jilted you!"

"He did not," Lilian answered. "We both saw the truth in time. We could never have been a happy man and wife, and we have agreed to part. There will be a good deal of gossip about it I suppose, but I have taught myself already not to care about that."

The impulsive little Irsihwoman threw herself at her friend's knees and kissed her hand and fondled it.

"I declare," she said, half-crying, "that I feel ashamed of myself. To come here and flaunt meself in your face as I have done while you were in trouble! Oh, it's not the thing I'd have done if I'd known."

"My dear," said Lilian, "you have done me a great deal more good than the doctors, and I am very, very glad to hear your news. I think you are the very girl for Mr. Billery, and I wish you all good fortune. You must have me at the wedding, and I promise to be quite well by that time."

"I hoped to have ye for one of me bridesmaids," said Belle.

"And so you shall, dear," Lilian answered, "and we'll go to town and choose the trousseau together."

"Ah!" cried Belle, "that's better than I bargained for."

From the hour of Belle's visit Lilian dated her convalescence. There is something in the near approach of a wedding which is infinitely interesting to the feminine mind, and there is nothing in the whole delightful business of preparation more enthralling than the selection of the sacrificial robes and the trousseau and the going-away dress. And all this took Lilian out of herself, and helped greatly to banish from her mind the torturing guesses with which she had been bewildered. Her heart must have been less engaged than she fancied, for her regrets were devoted not one half so much to the parting between Alexis and herself as to the cause of it. As to that cause she did not cease to grieve, nor ever will, so long as she lives to think of it; but in the pressure of novel occupations she could from time to time forget it, and the pain grew bearable.

There are certain generous natures which feel an intense delight in giving, and her's was one of them. And poor Belle, who had known what it was to pinch and spare for the greater part of her life, and who found it an endless struggle to make the proverbial two ends meet, was more than pleased to find a wealthy and free-handed friend beside her at this juncture.

There were glorious mornings in the "megasins des modes" in Bond street, with choice lingeries and hats and dresses, and gloves galore, and evenings of luxurious ecstacy for Belle and Miss Cole when the purchases were laid out for examination. These sacred treasures were seen by all the ladies of the village, and Miss Molloy was the envy of them all. She paraded Billery to church on Sunday and paraded him back again with the intensest satisfaction, and Billery was all the best of men needs be.

And the days went on until at last the day of days was reached, and the bridegroom was landed for life. Truscott's wedding gift consisted of two books of coupons for a month's trip around Europe, and a check for one hundred pounds. It was Truscott who gave away the bride, and after the wedding ceremony and breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Billery started for Paris, and so began life anew in the belief that they were going to be happy ever after.

CHAPTER XXII.

Detective Sergeant Holt sat in his arm-chair in his own neat little sitting room over his morning newspaper and his first pipe. He had been very hard worked of late, and had been engaged on business of a very difficult and dangerous kind. He had been in pursuit of a band of skilful coiners, had run his quarry to earth, had escaped with his life by a hair's breadth in arresting the gang, and, after securing his first remand, was left to an informal holiday until the next hearing. He felt all the satisfaction natural to a man who had successfully finished a piece of delicate work, and to that was added the knowledge that he was marked out for promotion and an increase of pay. So he sat in slippered ease, and was, for the time being at least, as happy and contented a man as might be found in London.

He was skimming over for the fifth or sixth time the report of the highly complimentary little address he had received from the sitting magistrate at Bow street on the previous day, when he heard a ring at the bell, and a moment later, when the landlady had responded to the summons, a foreign-sounding voice asked for him by name.

"Halloa!" said the sergeant, "that's old Ribot, surely. Now, what does he want here?"

It was M. Ribot, sure enough, accurately booted and gloved, wearing a frock coat tightly buttoned, and carrying a glossy silk hat in his hand.

"What is it this time?" the Englishman asked, "business or pleasure?"

"It is business," Ribot answered. "We have information that a refugee from Cayenne has found his way to London. He has a life sentence hanging over him already, and before his escape he secreted a warder's side-arms and killed his comrade. I see that you have done a brilliant stroke of work, my friend. My congratulations. I felicitate you. It should mean a step, eh?"

(To Be Continued.)

Mummies, Leather Chips and Dried Fish Have Been Used.

"I have eaten mutton cooked on a fire of broken mummy," said the sailor. "It was in Egypt, and the mummy was stolen out of a tomb. The natives are always stealin' mummies. They sell them in pieces to tourists, and what pieces they can't dispose of otherwise they throw into the bin for fuel.

"Mummy burns like tinder, but it's a ghastly fuel. It is as ghastly a fuel as the shoe lasts which they burn in the shoemakin' town of Lynn, where the old fashioned and discarded lasts, glowin' in the grates, look to you like amputated human trilbies.

"I have been in tannery towns where the fuel is leather chips. This fuel smells and smokes. It clinkers, too, formin' itself into big, solid chunks that have to be broke up with the poker every little while.

"In British Columbia, where fish is as plentiful as air, they burn dried fish when there's no wood handy. The oil in the fish causes them to burn well, but the smell of this fish fuel ain't to no white man's taste."

A Rabid View.

"Now, professor," said Miss Kay, "you know something of human nature; at what age does the average man of intelligence marry?"

"Dotage!" promptly replied the crabbed old fellow.

One Vie wof It.

"After all, the old saying, 'There's always room at the top,' doesn't mean anything."

"Unless," replied the traveling man, "it means that the lower berths in the sleeper are usually taken before you get there."

CAME BACK TO HER

OLD MAMMY FINALLY REMEMBERED PASSWORD.

Was "Mighty Nigh the Money" but Without Identification It Was Not Forthcoming—Set Her Mind to Work.

The banks give secret passwords to depositors who cannot read or write. When one of these depositors goes to draw out money the cashier leans forward and whispers:

"What's your password?"

The depositor whispers an answer and, if the correct password is given, the money is paid out.

In a bank the other day a negro woman sat upon a bench, her face indicating intense application of mind. The cashier nodded toward her and said:

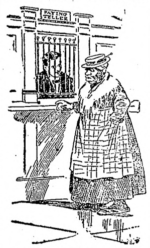
"She's forgotten her password and is trying to think of it. She came to the window awhile ago and wanted to get some money. She only wanted a small amount. But she can't write. She's one of quite a number of our depositors who are given passwords when they open an account. When she came in I asked her to give her name and address. She answered right up. 'What's your password?' I asked her.

"'M-m,' she exclaimed, pursing her lips, 'let me see. Ain't dat peculiah? Hit done 'scaped mah mind now.'

"'Can't you think of it?' I said. You know I can't pay the money until you give me the password?'

"'Lord, honey,' she exclaimed 'Ah's mighty nigh dat money. But Ahj es' can't remember hit now.'

"'Well sit down and think it over,' I suggested to her. 'It may come to you.'"



"Hit Done 'Scaped Mah Mind."

In a few minutes the old woman arose, with a happy look upon her face, and went up to the cashier's window. She put her face as far inside the narrow window as she could and whispered:

"Abraham Linkun."

"Correct," answered the cashier, and he paid her the money she was after.

"Ah, jes' couldn't place dat man's name at first," she said, as she went out.

Opium Hid in Signboard.

A novel hiding place for contraband was revealed when a Chinaman, whose principal baggage consisted of a signboard of portentous size and weight, arrived at Bankok from Hongkong in the steamer Loosok. Never before was such a signboard brought to Bankok. The customs guards sat round and admired it, discussing it from every point of view. They even went so far as to bore a small hole in it. This led them to obtain other tools, with the result that it was found not to be of solid wood, but constructed of thin boards back and front, cunningly joined to a square frame. The interior was hollow and filled with flat tins all containing opium. The owner of the sign was arrested.

Tartar Holy Well.

A holy well, or spring, away up on a hillside near Kazan and overlooking the river, is believed by the Tartar villagers to possess extraordinary healing properties. The spring flows into a rocky basin about ten feet square and three feet deep.

The water is a pure crystal, sparkling in the sunshine, and the marvelous thing is that the bottom of the well is thickly covered with silver coins thrown in by sufferers who come to be cured by the water, to propitiate the spirit of the well. Although the tank is only three feet deep and the watch is kept on the spot, no one has ever been known to touch or attempt to take any of the coins.

A MISSOURI WOMAN

Tells a Story of Awful Suffering and Wonderful Relief.

Mrs. J. B. Johnson, of 603 West Hickman street, Columbia, Mo., says: "Following an operation two years ago, dropsy set in, and my left side was so swollen the doctor said he would have to tap out the water. There was constant pain and a gurgling sensation around my heart, and I could not raise my arm above my head. The kidney action was disordered and passages of the secretions too frequent. On the advice of my husband I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Since using two boxes my trouble has not reappeared. This is wonderful, after suffering two years."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Fly Fly.

"Will you step into my parlor?"
Said the spider to the fly,
Inviting her politely to her doom;
But the fly was pretty fly,
"Nay, kind sir," she made reply,
"I'm afraid your parlor's but a dining room."

When the Wife Is Away.

Things happen funny when one's wife is away. The other night we were awakened about midnight by a peculiar noise. Summoning up all our courage, we descended the stairs and opened the kitchen door, from which place the noise seemed to be coming, about an inch. What we saw was a flying machine that outclassed the Santos-Dumont machine 2 to 1. It was a mouse that had fastened its tail to a sheet of sticky fly paper and was sailing around the room at a dizzy gait.—Dows (Iowa) Advocate.

FEARFUL PAINS

SUGGESTIONS HOW WOMEN MAY FIND RELIEF.

Miss Nellie Holmes
Mrs. Tillie Hart

While no woman is entirely free from periodical suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. This is a severe strain on a woman's vitality. When pain exists something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to a serious derangement of the whole female organism.

Thousands of women have testified in grateful letters to Mrs. Pinkham that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound overcomes woman's special pains and irregularities.

It provides a safe and sure way of escape from distressing and dangerous weaknesses and diseases.

The two following letters tell so convincingly what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will do for women, they cannot fail to bring hope to thousands of sufferers.

Miss Nellie Holmes, of 540 N. Division Street, Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Your medicine is indeed an ideal medicine for women. I suffered misery for years with painful periods, headaches, and bearing-down pains. I consulted two different physicians but failed to get any relief. A friend from the east advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and no longer suffer as I did before. My periods are natural; every ache and pain is gone, and my general health is much improved. I advise all women who suffer to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Tillie Hart, of Larimore, N. D., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I might have been spared many months of suffering and pain had I only known of the efficacy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sooner; for I have tried so many remedies without help.

"I dreaded the approach of every month, as it meant so much pain and suffering for me, but after I had used the Compound two months I became regular and natural and am now perfectly well and free from pain. I am very grateful for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands without a peer as a remedy for all the distressing ills of women.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound rests upon the well-earned gratitude of American women.

When women are troubled with pain or irregularities, displacements or ulceration of the organs, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation, backache, bloating (or flatulency), general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine, for you need the best.

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat you with kindness and her advice is free. No woman ever regretted writing her and she has helped thousands. Address Lynn, Mass.

WASHINGTON WELL LAID OUT.

How National Capital Was Planned by Its Founders.

The national capital, as planned by Washington, L'Enfant and other unnamed founders, and as described by writers, occupies a small part of the District of Columbia only, says the National Magazine. Rock creek, flowing down a narrow valley, with precipitous banks, bounds it on the west and separates it from what was Georgetown; the eastern branch of the Potomac river bound it on the east and south; and a long, irregularly curved street, circling along the foot of Meridian hill and the hills to the east of it, known for many years as "The Boundary," and now as Florida avenue, was the northern boundary of the city. Sentimental considerations should have retained this appropriate name, "The Boundary," for it marked the limits of the city as the founders planned it, and showed plainly what their successors have added.

Within these bounds are all the avenues, streets, squares and parks that were in the original design of the city, the capitol and all of the public buildings except the naval observatory and the asylum for the insane. The parks have been sadly encroached on for public buildings, congress, after having ordered the sale of the lots which became the share of the government in the original division, finding it more economical to seize parks and reservations for building purposes than to buy the needed ground. While the city was yet unbuilt, and during the many years it was being constructed, and had but small population, the long avenues and streets, with high sounding names, won for Washington the appropriate name of "the city of magnificent distances." But the epithet is no longer applicable—almost all of the original site of the city is built upon; the boundary has been overlapped in every direction, and the part of the city outside is almost as large as that within the original bounds, and is rapidly extending. After the lapse of more than a century, nothing but commendation can be offered of what the founders did, and it is marvelous how well and wisely they planned. When they laid out the city, the national population was about 5,000,000, and the area was enough for a nation of 50,000,000, while the design was so beautiful and commodious, that city building in our day has hardly reached up to it. In but few instances, in any line of human endeavor, has foresight done so well, and for this all thanks is due to the founders of Washington.

JUSTICES OF SUPREME COURT.

Fifty-Three Have Sat on Bench of Highest Tribunal.

There have been 53 associate justices of the supreme court, seven of whom are there yet. Of these Justices Story and Fields each served 34 years, Justices McLean, of Ohio, and Wayne, of Georgia, each 32 years, Bushrod Washington, of Virginia, 31 years, William Johnson, of South Carolina, 30 years; Justices Catron, of Tennessee, and Miller, of Iowa, each 28 years.

There have been one chief justice, Marshall, and four associate justices—Blair, Washington, Barbour and Daniel from Virginia; one chief justice, Rutledge, and two associate justices, Rutledge and Johnson, from South Carolina.

North Carolina furnished Justices Iredell and Moore; Georgia, Wayne and Woods; Tennessee, Catron and Jackson; Kentucky, Todd, Trimble and Harlan; Alabama, McKinley and Campbell; Mississippi, Lamar; Louisiana, White.

Since 1861 there have been only five justices appointed from southern states. They are in the order named—Harlan of Kentucky, Woods of Georgia, Tamar of Mississippi, Jackson of Tennessee and White of Louisiana. During the same time 17 justices have been appointed from northern states.

Fort McHenry to be Abandoned.

Historic Fort McHenry, the chief defense of Baltimore during the war of 1812, and whose bombardment by the British fleet led Francis Scott Key to write "The Star Spangled Banner," is about to be abandoned. Orders have been issued by the general staff of the army that all the soldiers comprising the Thirty-Ninth Coast artillery, now stationed at Fort McHenry, and who man the famous post, shall abandon the fort on March first next. It is announced that the change means that no longer after that date will Fort McHenry be a military post, after serving in that capacity for more than a century, having been established in 1791. It has been found, the government officers say, that Fort McHenry has outlived its usefulness for defense purposes, and after March first will be given over to the care of the engineer department.

Fort McHenry was named after James McHenry, an Irish physician, who served through the revolutionary war and afterward became one of General Washington's private secretaries. Dr. McHenry was surgeon of the Fifth Pennsylvania regiment in the revolution and was promoted to the staff of General Lafayette. After the war McHenry settled down in Maryland, representing that state in the Confederation Congress that assembled after the United States had gained its independence. In 1796 Washington appointed Dr. McHenry as Secretary of War in his cabinent, which position he retained under President Adams' administration until 1800, when he resigned. Dr. McHenry died in 1816.

AWFUL SUFFERING.

"Words cannot speak highly enough for the Cuticura Remedies. I am now seventy-two years of age. My system had been all run down. My blood was so bad that blood poisoning had set in. I had several doctors attending me, so finally I went to the hospital where I was laid up for two months. My foot and ankle were almost beyond recognition. Dark blood flowed out of wounds in many places and I was so disheartened that I thought surely my last chance was slowly leaving me. As the foot did not improve, you can readily imagine how I felt. I was simply disgusted and tired of life. I stood this pain, which was dreadful, for six months, and during this time I was not able to wear a shoe and not able to work. Some one spoke to me about Cuticura. The consequenses were I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies of one of my friends who was a druggist, and the praise that I gave after the second application is beyond description; it seemed a miracle for the Cuticura Remedies took effect immediately. I washed the foot with the Cuticura Soap before applying the Ointment and I took the Resolvent at the same time. After two week's treatment my foot was healed completely. People who had seen my foot during my illness and who have seen it since the cure, can hardly believe their own eyes. Robert Schoenbauer, Newburg, N. Y., August 21, 1905."

IN THE WHEELHOUSE.

It Is There That All the Forces of a Great Vessel Are Directed.

On entering the wheelhouse of an ocean liner a landsman is likely to be awed by the group of instruments and masses of complicated machinery on every hand. Your eye will first be caught by the wheel or wheels, for often there are two or more of them, one directly in line with the other. The first of these is an insignificant looking affair perhaps a foot or so in diameter, which seems out of all proportion to the work it must accomplish. Directly in front of it stands the ship's compass, while back of it are massed many complicated wheels and levers which transform the slightest motion of the wheel into the great force which guides the ship.

All the great steamers are steered nowadays by the aid of steam or electricity. In the old days half a dozen men at times would struggle with the wheel in high seas, and sailors have been killed by the rapid revolving of the projecting spoke handles. The modern steering gear makes it possible to guide these great ships with the slightest pressure. The rudder, weighing many tons, is perhaps 500 feet astern, yet with a touch of the polished wheel the great 700 foot ship will swing from side to side with almost the delicacy of a compass needle. The wheel that the steersman operates merely governs the steering engine, which, in turn, moves the great rudder.

The most astonishing thing about the bridge is to find the wheelhouse with all its curtains tightly drawn, as often happens, and the man at the helm steering the boat without seeing ahead at all. At night or even by day if the light of the binnacle is confusing the wheelhouse is often completely shut in. The man at the wheel, it is explained, does not need to look ahead. The lookout high up in the "crow's nest" and the officer on watch on the bridge will keep him informed if any object is sighted. The duty of the man at the wheel is to keep the ship on her course. Throughout his watch of four hours he must keep his eyes on the compass and nowhere else.

On one side of the wheelhouse are posted the sailing directions, which give the wheelsman explicit orders. The course to be followed for the day is placed in a neat little rack called the compass control. It suggests the rack in church at the side of the pulpit which announces the number of the hymns and psalms for the day's service. The compass control will announce, for instance, N, 7, 8, W, or some such formula. The wheelsman glances at this as he takes his watch at the wheel and holds the great ship exactly on this course until he is relieved.—Francis Arnold Collins in St. Nicholas.

IDEAS OF HEAVEN.

The Haitians locate heaven in one of the beautiful valleys of their island.

The Assyrians believe heaven is in the bowels of the earth or far away in the east.

Some natives of the south Pacific think heaven a place where they will be white.

The Greek belief, according to Socrates, was that the pious went to heaven, like prisoners set free, to dwell in unclouded peace.

According to the ancient astronomers, heaven was seven or eight solid spheres, with a planet for the center of each. Some even ran the number up to seventy.

The Egyptians thought heaven to be on many islands at the foot of the Milky way. Those worthy spent the time harvesting beans and in feasting, singing and playing.

Etiquette.

"Etiquette" is a French word which originally meant a label indicating the price or quality, the English "ticket," and in old French was usually specialized to mean a soldier's billet. The phrase "that's the ticket" shows the change to the present meaning of manners according to code. Burke solemnly explained that "etiquette had its original application to those ceremonies and formal observances practiced at courts. The term came afterward to signify certain formal methods used in the transactions between sovereign states."

BAD BLOOD
THE SOURCE OF ALL DISEASE

Every part of the body is dependent on the blood for nourishment and strength. When this life stream is flowing through the system in a state of purity and richness we are assured of perfect and uninterrupted health; because pure blood is nature's safe-guard against disease. When, however, the body is fed on weak, impure or polluted blood, the system is deprived of its strength, disease germs collect, and the trouble is manifested in various ways. Pustular eruptions, pimples, rashes and the different skin affections show that the blood is in a feverish and diseased condition as a result of too much acid or the presence of some irritating humor. Sores and Ulcers are the result of morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood, and Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., are all deep-seated blood disorders that will continue to grow worse as long as the poison remains. These impurities and poisons find their way into the blood in various ways. Often a sluggish, inactive condition of the system, and torpid state of the avenues of bodily waste, leaves the refuse and waste matters to sour and form uric and other acids, which are taken up by the blood and distributed throughout the circulation. Coming in contact with contagious diseases is another cause for the poisoning of the blood; we also breathe the germs and microbes of Malaria into our lungs, and when these get into the blood in sufficient quantity it becomes a carrier of disease instead of health. Some are so unfortunate as to inherit bad blood, perhaps the dregs of some old constitutional disease of ancestors is handed down to them and they are constantly annoyed and troubled with it. Bad blood is the source of all disease, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and purified the body is sure to suffer in some way. For blood troubles of any character S. S. S. is the best remedy ever discovered. It goes down into the circulation and removes any and all poisons, supplies the healthful properties it needs, and completely and permanently cures blood diseases of every kind. The action of S. S. S. is so thorough that hereditary taints are removed and weak, diseased blood made strong and healthy so that disease cannot remain. It cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Sores and Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., and does not leave the slightest trace of the trouble for future outbreaks. The whole volume of blood is renewed and cleansed after a course of S. S. S. It is also nature's greatest tonic, made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and is absolutely harmless to any part of the system. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Book on the blood and any medical advice free to all who write.

PETITION CIRCULATED FOR NEW COUNTY

Fostonites Circulating Petition for New County of Nelson.

Eighteen Townships Are Included in the Proposed New County.

Oscar Holden, of Holden and Hancock, hardware men, J. E. Campbell, liveryman, and L. W. Larson general merchant, all of Fosston are spending the day in the city securing signatures to a petition for the creation of Nelson Co., to be composed of the original thirteen towns and five others this side, cutting off the eastern end of Polk County, the dividing line coming between Dugdale and Mentor.

A large delegation left Fosston yesterday and arrived on the belated train yesterday afternoon, dividing up so that every town of any size in Polk county was reached the same day.

Under the new code but one petition can be voted upon at the same election, and the Fostonites are getting into the game early for the election two years hence. Their petition is being liberally signed here, and the question will without a doubt be voted upon two years hence. McIntosh has as yet made no move but will be heard from later without a doubt.

The petition must contain names of 25 per cent of the voters of Polk county or about 1400 and Fosston is named as the county seat. The first board of county commissioners will be Fred S. Severson, of Hill River, T. Hanson of Queen, Dreng Grundyson, Sletten, J. O. Rindahl, Garden and Oscar Melsness, Badger.—Crookston Press.

Men Dress Well.

Nearly every man and especially every young man desires to dress as well as his income will permit. A limited income, however, is no excuse now-a-days for a man to be poorly dressed. Good clothes are within the reach of all. Harry Mitchell in a series of editorials (the fiast number appears in this issue) tells how a man may be well dressed for $15, $20, and $25. Mr. Mitchell has been in business in Minneapolis for years; has the best equipped tailoring establishment in the Northwest and makes more clothes for business and professional men than all the tailors in Minneapolis and St. Paul combined. He has won the reputation of being Minneapolis' finest tailor and of doing business strictly on the square. He guarantees satisfaction and his guarantee is good. A perusal of these editorials will let you into the secret and no doubt be to your financial gain.

INDIANS WELL FIXED FOR A LONG WINTER

Agent Frater Says Northern Minnesota Reds Will not Want this Year.

Red Lake Indians Especially Well Provided With Money and Provisions.

For several years it has been noted that the Indians of the Leech Lake, Cass Lake, Winnibigoshish and Red Lake reservations have made complaints to the Indian authorities at Washington, asserting that they were in exceedingly straightened circumstances from a financial standpoint.

These conditions are decidedly changed at the present time. John T. Frater, Indian agent, states that the Indians of the Red Lake band are especially comfortably fixed. They have been given two large payments this fall, and will undoubtedly be given another before spring.

The Leech lake Indians are in fair condition. They have been continually advised by the agent to "think of the morrow" and husband their small earnings for the winter months.

At the other reservations the conditions are about the same as at Leech lake, and the Indians of northern Minnesota are in better condition generally than they have been for several years.

CAR SHORTAGE IS SERIOUS

Traveling Man's View of the Situation in Northwest.

The car shortage throughout the whole Northwest is becoming a serious matter, as it is holding back great quantities of grain that should have been turned into cash long before this. A traveling salesman stated the other day that it was his belief that the roads were holding back cars because they were planning on getting the grain over the railroads instead of by the lake and that as soon as navigation closed plenty of cars would be forthcoming. In one of the towns in which he has several customers the merchants could not get their money because the farmers could not ship their wheat on account of this shortage. This meant a great deal to the house for which this man worked and they immediately took it up with the railroads with the result that it was only a short time when that particular town had all the cars they needed.

Arabian Mares Imported to the U. S.

For the first time the sultan of Turkey has granted permission for the exportation of Arabian mares to the United States. About twenty years ago he permitted the sale of some stallions, but at that time he would not allow any mares to be sent. The present importation is regarded as of considerable importance from the horse-breeders' point of view, as likely to lead to marked improvement in certain directions in American horses. Every one ought to know the value of golden grain belt beer. It is an ideal family beverage, pure, delicious and wholesome. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

New Stamps.

Postage stamps of the issue of 1907 are to contain the name of the city and state in which the postoffice is situated. Two reasons are given for this change, the chief one being that it will tend to do away with the big postoffice robberies and make it easier to detect the robbers and the other, that it will prevent padding through stamps sold to residents who do business in adjoining towns and cities.

The new style of stamps will be placed on sale at 6,000 presidential postoffices.

A Strange Awakening.

Senator Bailey of Texas, in describing a terrific fight that he had once seen on the streets of New York, said that the hubbub and confusion reminded him of an episode that happened on a train.

"On a certain train," he said, "a very large, muscular man fell asleep, and annoyed the passengers by snoring tremendously. A drummer, carrying half a lemon in his hand, tiptoed over to a little boy who sat behind the snorer.

"'Son,' said the drummer, 'I am a doctor, and if that man doesn't stop snoring he'll die of apoplexy. Watch your chance, and, as soon as his mouth opens a little wider lean over and squeeze this lemon into it.'

"The boy obeyed."

Awesome.

PRESIDENT BACK AT WHITE HOUSE

VOICES THOROUGH ENJOYMENT OF HIS MOST REMARKABLE VOYAGE.

CONDUCTOR NABS TRAIN ROBBER

BOLD BANDIT HOLDS UP PASSENGERS ON A TRAIN IN MISSOURI.

Washington, Nov. 28.—Completing a remarkable trip to Panama, during which he traveled several thousand miles by sea and visited not only the Isthmus, but Porto Rico as well, and voicing his thorough enjoyment of the entire voyage, President Roosevelt returned to Washington at 10:42 o'clock last night.

The trip up the Potomac on the converted yacht Mayflower, to which he and his party were transferred from the Louisiana at Piney Point yesterday afternoon, was made without special incident.

The president landed within ten minutes after the arrival of the Mayflower.

Pleased With Everything.

To those who met him he stated he had had a delightful trip and was feeling finely. The president and Mrs. Roosevelt immediately proceeded to the White House.

Speaking of his trip, the president said:

"We had a very pleasant—very enjoyable—time, and I am deeply impressed with the United States navy, with Panama and with Porto Rico."

The Panama canal, it was stated by the president, will be the subject of a special message, and consequently on that subject, he will say nothing at this time.

ENGAGES IN FIERCE BATTLE.

Conductor Beats Robber Into Submission After Desperate Battle.

Marshall, Mo., Nov. 28.—The bandit who held up the Chicago & Alton train Sunday night between Glasgow and Slater, Mo., and who was brought to the county jail here, was captured solely through the bravery and quickness of the action of Conductor Heywood, who says that the robber snapped his revolver at him and that probably the only thing that saved his life was that the hammer descended on his thumb.

Surrendering his revolver to the conductor, the robber made a break for liberty. Heywood followed closely after firing one shot, and grabbed him by the coat collar as the robber was trying to jump from the car.

Battle in Great Peril.

After he had been dragged into the vestibule again the robber continued to fight desperately, and Heywood was compelled to pound him over the head with the captured revolver until he was senseless. Immediately upon his arrival here the prisoner offered to make a full confession if the charge against him was made burglary. In Missouri the extreme penalty for train robbery is death; the minimum ten years' imprisonment.

Tells About Robbery.

The prosecutor refused any concessions. The bandit then volunteered a statement, in which he described how he boarded the train and how he subsequently was beaten into submission by the conductor and train crew. He got $1,500 and a number of watches.

GRAIN DOESN'T COME.

Present Supply Situation Has No Parallel.

Grain receipts at Minneapolis, from Sept. 1 to Nov. 20 of the present year are 21,286,470 bushels short of the figures for the corresponding period of 1905. as is shown by a special report just prepared in the office of L. T Jamme, secretary of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce. The discrepancy in wheat receipts alone is 12,798,390 bushels. Veterans of the Minneapolis wheat market say that no parallel for this situation can be found in at least twenty-five years of history The existing conditions are considered all the more remarkable from the fact that the grain acreage for 1906 was large and the crop influence throughout the season uniformly favorable.

Grain receipts at Minneapolis Sept 1, 1906, to Nov. 20, compared with Sept. 1, 1905, to Nov. 20, are as follows:

VOTE WAS NOT CERTIFIED.

Court Contest on County Division Is Expected in Itasca County.

According to the official returns from the recent election a majority of 477 votes was cast in favor of county division in Itasca county. As these precincts mostly are in that section of the county which opposed division, it is considered more than likely that a contest will be made. Big Fork, Blackberry, Clementson, Feeley, Frazer, the three precincts in Grand Rapids, Huff, La Croix, Marcell Pokegama, Sago, Swan River, Jameson, Moose Park and Plum Creek did not certify the vote. It will be necessary to secure a court order if the vote from these precincts is to be counted.

PACKET BUSINESS GROWS.

Winona Drawbridge Records Show Trend of Mississippi Trade.

The last boat of the season has gone through the drawbridge at Winona and the records for the season are complete. They show that there has been a decided falling off in boats and rafts but there has been a considerable increase in barges. There were 1,870 boats through the draw in the season just closed. as compared with 1,191 last year. This year 408 rafts were brought down, as compared with 693 last year. The decrease in the rafts is an index of the dwindling of the lumber business in this section. The increase in barges shows that much river work was done this summer. There was a large increase in packet and excursion business.

CREAMERY AT FARM SCHOOL.

Legislature Will Be Asked to Provide $20,000 for Equipment

The next legislature will be called upon for an appropriation of about $20,000 for building and equipping a model creamery at the state agricultural college. A committee from the Minnesota Butter and Cheesemakers' association is leading the movement for the model creamery and a permanent buttermakers' school to be open the year around.

At present the only instruction afforded to buttermakers is a four weeks' course in the fall, when about 150 buttermakers are gathered into a class and given a specified course of instruction. The dairy building at the farm school is used for this purpose. The instruction is under the supervision of the dairy instructors in the regular courses at the farm school and assistants are selected as best possible from the dairy and food department and elsewhere.

The buttermakers contend that the present building is not especially fitted for giving instruction in buttermaking and is not designed to give the buttermaker information as to how a model creamery should be built and operated. Instruction is given in the different phases of buttermaking, but under conditions different from those met in the creamery. A model creamery would give the buttermaker ideas regarding the best arrangement for machinery in a real creamery and would give him instruction that could be applied under the conditions under which he must do his regular work.

The buttermakers favor having regular instructors in the model creamery who will give instruction all the year around. This would permit the buttermaker to attend at any time of the year he finds convenient and stay as long as he finds necessary or desirable. He would get individual instruction and if he wants information on any special branch of the work he can get it.

VOTE ON STATE TICKET.

A. O. Eberhart, for Lieutenant Governor, Will Have Plurality of 25,000.

A. O. Eberhart probably will have a plurality of at least 25,000 for lieutenant governor over L. G. Pendergast, the Democratic candidate. He has a plurality of 21,360 in sixty-two counties. The same proportion in the rest of the counties would give him about 23,000, but it may be higher than this, as nearly all the Democratic counties are included in the list.

Fifty-seven counties that have sent complete returns to the secretary of state give Eberhart 70,542 and Pendergast 51,650. Ramsey gives them 11,756 and 12,413, Hennepin gives them 20,084 and 18,890, respectively, and three other counties make the total 109,816 for Eberhart and 87,456 for Pendergast.

The fifty-seven counties which have reported to the secretary of state give Johnson 83,524 votes and A. L. Cole 48,168. Ramsey gave Johnson 16,561 and Cole 8,862, Hennepin gave Johnson 28,404 and Cole 14,010. Of the remaining twenty-four counties complete returns have been received from eighteen, and nearly complete returns from six. The net plurality for Johnson on these returns is 71,594, and the complete returns will not change this more than two or three hundred either way.

The early estimates of pluralities of 60,000 or more for Iverson and Young are shown to be fully warranted by the returns now in. The other Republican candidates, C. C. Dinehart, Julius Schmahl, C. F. Staples and C. A. Pidgeon, will be only a few thousand behind, in the order named.

FOR A GREATER WINONA.

Special Committee Indorses Plans of Randle and Others.

The special committee composed of Rt. Rev. Bishop Joseph B. Cotter, Joseph Schlingerman and Frank E. Gartside, and appointed to report to the Winona Business Men's association and the board of trade relative to the movement to secure a greater Winona, has completed its report. It indorses the plan proposed by T. M. Randle, and for the carrying out of which subscriptions have been made, but which needed some such indorsement as this to help raise the remainder of the $100,000 required, the plan being to plat a factory addition at the West end and sell the lots, raising money to permit donating sites to factories. The committee concurs in the suggestion that a committee be appointed to visit the towns where like plans have been successfully carried out, and indorses the proposition to appoint Mr. Randle industrial agent of the combined associations.

GUARDSMEN TO TALK WAR.

National Guard Association Will Hold Convention Dec. 13-14.

The Minnesota National Guard association will meet in St. Paul for its annual convention on Dec. 13 and 14. Orders for the meeting and the official program have been announced by Adjt. Gen. F. B. Wood and President George C. Lambert. The convention promises to be one of the largest and most interesting and beneficial ever held by Minnesota's defenders.

CARRIERS HAVE TO GO SOME.

Travel Enough to Encircle Earth 460 Times.

Although probably not one of them ever thought of such a thing, Minnesota's rural route mail carriers travel enough each year to circle the earth 460 times. They do not really drive across the ocean into Europe, thus making the circle, but the combined force of carriers during a year covers in the neighborhood of 11,500,000 miles in their travels through the state.

There are 1,463 rural routes in Minnesota, each route averaging about twenty-five miles. Thus in a day the carriers cover about 37,000 miles, which is almost half the entire wagon road mileage in the state. On an average of twenty-five miles a day, one carrier would in a year's time travel 7,825 miles, not including Sunday, but figuring on 313 days for a year.

As the circumference of the earth is about 25,000 miles and 11,500,000 miles are made each year by the 1,463 carriers, the distance around the globe is made 460 times during one year. In one day the carriers make 37,000 miles, which would take them around the earth once and a half.

Minnesota has 79,000 miles of road within its borders, half of which is covered by the rural carriers daily.

The ability of the rural carriers of this state to cover ground was discovered by State Engineer Cooley, who has prepared 1,463 blanks to be sent among the rural carriers to ascertain the conditions of the various roads in Minnesota. Each carrier will be requested to describe the condition of the roads he is obliged to travel, give the nature of the roadbeds and suggest any necessary repairs.

With the appropriation expected from the coming session of the legislature the state engineer expects to start work on the roads next spring, and he is anxious to secure all information possible relative to their condition. For this reason the men who travel 11,500,000 miles yearly over Minnesota's roads have been requested to send in their opinions, which it is anticipated will be of great value.

SCHOOLS ARE IN GOOD SHAPE.

State Superintendent Olsen Is Preparing Figures to Go in the Annual.

Figures now being compiled by J. W. Olsen, state superintendent of instruction, for his annual report show some interesting things in connection with state school work.

Receipts of independent and special school districts throughout Minnesota for the state fiscal year ending July 31 last, were $6,452,627.67. At the end of the year these schools have come out with a total cash balance on hand of $949,130.25.

Receipts of common school districts throughout the state during the same twelve months were $5,954,596.27, and these institutions came out the end of the year with an aggregate cash balance of $1,680,758.

Items under the head of receipts of independent and special school districts, which include the large cities, are as follows: Cash on hand at beginning of year, $1,023,425.94; received from apportionment, $813,318.43; from special tax collections, $3,126,925.07; from local one mill tax, $288,644.59; from special state aid, $275,074.29; received from bonds sold and all other sources, $925,239.35.

The indebtedness of the 212 independent and special districts in the state totals $4,325,403.75.

Disbursements in the aggregate of independent and special school districts for the year are as follows: Teachers' wages and board, $2,975,707.97; fuel and school supplies, $315,075.70; repairs and improving grounds, $181,079.34; now school houses and sites, $831,839.17; bonds and interest, $394,518.13; library books, $16,862.78; text books, $106,933.60; apparatus, $29,824.36; transportation of pupils, $2,279.10; all other purposes, $659,587.27.

PLAN FINE PROGRAM.

Minnesota Agricultural Society Meets in Minneapolis Jan 8-10.

The officers of the Minnesota State Agricultural societl are planning for an exceptionally fine program for the next annual meeting which will be held in Minneapolis Jan. 8, 9 and 10. Secretary E. W. Randall has already invited Gov. Johnson to make the opening address and has arranged for an entire meeting on dairy matters, the program to be under the direction of E. K. Slater of the state dairy and food department. Another important subject which will be a feature of the program will be that of "tile drainage." The meeting is held in Minneapolis this winter (although it was St. Paul's regular turn) in order to avoid the confusion and inconvenience of meeting in St. Paul during the legislative session. Next season the society will meet in St. Paul and thereafter will alternate between the two cities.

BARRED FROM STATE.

Two Insurance Companies Must Quit in Minnesota.

Two insurance companies, the Mercantile Fire and Marine of Boston and the German National of Chicago, were suspended from doing business in Minnesota by T. D. O'Brien, state insurance commissioner.

The companies show an unsatisfactory financial condition, according to the commissioner, due to losses sustained in the Frisco disaster.

Lumbermen all over the state are having a hard time securing help for their northern camps. The lumberjack is getting just about the wages he wants, and taking the job that suits him best.

"Credit is better than money," says James J. Hill, president of the Grat Northern railroad. But you bet if you ride on Jim's road or ship any hogs or cattle along his line you will have to put up cash or its equivalent.

The speakership fight is now engrossing the attention of the politicians. Of the several candidates each represents a particular interest, and the general public is not concerned so much as to which individual wins as to which crowd of grafters gets on top.

Dr. Willoughby, the well-known lecturer on food products, interviewed on the subject, said: "Eggs are really the only concentrated food known. When I am pressed with work I find nothing better in sustaining power than a few eggs broken into milk and swallowed, for in all that goes to repair the waste and supply fuel they are as good as a big dinner."

The independent voter has come to stay. real value to American farmers. It is said that 10,000 or more of these free seed packages forced upon the farmers of Long Island this year were destroyed by them and on investigation it was found that many of them had been on the market for 20 or 30 years and yet were called "rare and valuable."

The legislature should be fair to Northern Minnesota and pass a reapportionment bill at the coming session. Our own district, embracing Red Lake, Norman, Clearwater and Beltrami counties, has but one senator and two representatives, altough the population is 54,682. On the basis of representation in Southern Minnesota we would be entitled to three senators and six representatives. The district should be divided into three districts and given proper representation. Any other course would be unfair to this rapidly developing section of the state.

PRAISE FOR NEW MANAGENENT.

Minnesota Union Advocate—One of the best that the printing fraternity has ever produced in this community is John J. Cahill. This statement must be taken as going the whole way—best in workmanship in his craft, as well as best in intelligence, character and principle. It has come to us that John has determined to cast his lot with the city of Red Lake Falls, having decided to become part proprietor of the Red Lake Falls Courier. We congratulate Red Lake Falls, and we especially congratulate its people, that their local press will be under the direction of as bright, as capable and as decent a fellow as John. We congratulate him also on what appears to be a step in a direction that will enable him, and not others to reap the benefits of his undoubted ability. If Wm. Koch, Jr., his side partner, has any good share of the stuff his dad is made of—which we hope and believe he has—what is here said of John Cahill can be taken as having application to him as well.

According to the Red Lake Falls Gazette John E. NOVEMBER AILMENTS

THEIR PREVENTION AND CURE.

November is the month of falling temperatures. Over all the temperate regions the hot weather has passed and the first rigors of winter have appeared. As the great bulk of civilized nations is located in the Temperate Zones, the effect of changing seasons is a question of the highest importance. When the weather begins to change from warm to cold, when cool nights succeed hot nights, when clear, cold days follow hot, sultry days, the human body must adjust itself to this changed condition or perish.

The Human System Must Adjust itself to Changing Temperatures.

The perspiration incident to warm weather has been checked. This detains within the system poisonous materials which have heretofore found escape through the perspiration.

Most of the poisonous materials retained in the system by the checked perspiration find their way out of the body, if at all, through the kidneys. This throws upon the kidneys extra labor. They become charged and overloaded with the poisonous excretory materials. This has a tendency to inflame the kidneys, producing functional diseases of the kidneys and sometimes Bright's Disease.

Peruna acts upon the skin by stimulating the emunctory glands and ducts, thus preventing the detention of poisonous materials which should pass out. Peruna invigorates the kidneys and encourages them to fulfill their function in spite of the chills and discouragements of cold weather.

Pe-ru-na is a World-Renowned Remedy For Climatic Diseases.

Peruna is a combination of well-tried harmless remedies that have stood the test of time. Many of these remedies have been used by doctors and by the people in Europe and America for a hundred years.

Peruna has been used by Dr. Hartman in his private practice for many years with notable results. Its efficacy has been proven by decades of use by thousands of people, and has been substantiated over and over by many thousands of homes.

Damaged Venus de Milo.

A story is going the rounds of the clubs of a Chicago millionaire who ordered a replica of the Venus of Milo to be delivered at his home. When the case arrived and was opened, the millionaire discovered there were no arms and threatened to bring action against the railway company for damages. The company sent an official to inquire into the matter, found that the arms were missing—and paid.

Trouble Still In Store.

"Ah! my dear, I can't last much longer," gasped the dying Mr. Kloseman. "But, oh, it's sweet to think that even after death I'll be near you and watch over you."

"If that's so," replied she who was soon to be a rich young widow, "I'm afraid my extravagance will pain you terribly."

THE Brangwyn Mystery

"Well, I'm told so," Holt answered, modestly. "The chief was very nice about it, and so was Sir Albert. You've seen the paper?"

"Yes. I have seen it. It is very agreeable."

"Very agreeable," the sergeant assented. "When the praise and the pudding come together it's very soothing to the feelings. But about your own business. Can I help you? I'm at a loose end for a week."

"Yes," said Ribot. "There is one way in which you can help me. I want a quiet place, where I can trust the people not to pry or bother. I want it to be rather a low place, because it is a part of my game to seem poor and to do little."

"It's lucky you came to-day," Holt answered. "I've got the very thing you want. There's one of our men and his wife have set up a lodging house—in the way of business, you understand—next door to some people whom it's desirable to keep an eye on. When the time comes there may be a little bit of a rumpus, and they's got two lodgers, our own men, too, playing as being dockers out of work."

"That will suit to a hair," said Ribot. "May I bring a portmanteau here and make a change?"

"By all manner of means," his English colleague answered.

"Then I will return in an hour," said Ribot. "The sooner I get to work the better."

"All right! You'll find me here," Holt answered. On this understanding the visitor took his leave, and, returning about the time appointed, was shown to the sergeant's bed room. Thence he issued in a while, in a check shirt and no waistcoat, a shabby and ill-fitting jacket and trousers, and a pair of thick boots with splashes of lime upon them. He carried a rag of a cap in his hand.

"Will this do?" he asked.

"M'm," said the sergeant, doubtfully. "You're too fresh from the barber, and you are a lot too clean. I'll tell you what it is, Ribot; we've got a spare room here, and if you're not in a hurry you'd better stay here for a day or two and get properly frowsy. No razor, no bath, no brush or comb for a couple of days, and then you'll look the part."

"That is not a pleasant prospect," Ribot answered, with a grimace expressive of distaste.

"No," said the sergeant in assent. "It ain't a pleasant prospect, but in a thing like that I believe in being thorough. This sort of thing ain't in your line, much, is it?"

"No," returned Ribot. "They have always kept me spick and span until now. My game is generally that of the gentleman who is traveling upon holiday."

"Yes," said the sergeant. "So I've always known. You're after a countryman of your own, of course?"

"That is so."

"Well, you know," said the sergeant, "your accent ain't a bit like your get-up. You've worked up that swell Parisian style of yours till you'd pass for a Baron Somebody or a Count Something Else anywhere, I should fancy. That is to say, so far as I am a judge."

M. Ribot felt genuinely flattered by this tribute, which was really better deserved than the sergeant's knowledge of the French language allowed him to know.

"That matters nothing," he answered. "A man can always have come down in the world. There are plenty of broken gentlemen—in Paris, in London, in Berlin. Broken gentlemen are everywhere."

"Yes," the sergeant assented. "That's right enough. But I don't think you'd come down to a rig-out like that and keep yourself tidy. It's outside my experience, anyhow, and I think it would attract my notice. It ain't your game to attract notice, I suppose?"

"No," said Ribot. "It is not. I shall take your advice, my friend, but I shall not like it."

"Oh, a little dirt's all in the day's work, sometimes. I worked as a navvy once, for a whole month, and lived in the same hut with the man I was after. Vile fellow he was, to be sure. They hanged him at Manchester. Lord! I shall never forget how he stared when he saw me turn up in the witness box, and found out that I'd been foxing round with him on business all the time."

M. Ribot stayed with Sergeant Holt until that authority pronounced him to be sufficiently disreputable in aspect, and then, under cover of the night, was driven to his destination. His new quarters were comfortable enough, but his fastideous taste rebelled against them, and he took himself abroad at an early hour in the morning, and mounted guard over a certain house in Great Russell street. He waited there for many dreary hours and nothing came of it. He was growing hungry and leg-weary, but in no wise inclined to resign his purpase, when a door opened and slammed beside him and a man emerged upon the street. Off came Ribot's rag of a cap, and he spoke three words. The man's face went grey and his eyes bulged.

"Hola, Charve Souris!" said M. Ribot. It was the nickname by which M. Lepelletier—for the man was no other than the assassin of Grimaud—had been known among his fellow-convicts.

"Name of a dog!" said the quaking scoundrel. "Who are you?"

"I am the brother of the Black Hog, m'sieur."

The person who had rejoiced in this designation was a gentleman forcat, who had been chained to Lepelletier, and had been murdered by him as a prelude to escape. The wretch, who felt death at his neck already, turned greyer than before, and his eyes stood out in a most ghastly stare.

"If monsieur knows any quiet place where it would not be too remarkable to be seen in conversation with a man like me, it might be safer to talk there than in the street."

"Some," said Lepelletier in a croaking and unnatural voice, and walking with as faltering a gait as if twenty years had been added to his age, he shuffled toward the Tottenham Court road. There shouldering aside a public house door he entered, with Ribot close upon his heels. "Do you speak English?" he asked, in a tone not yet recovered from the effects of the fright he had received.

"Yes," said Ribot. "I speak English well enough."

"Call then," answered Lepelletier; "I pay."

The bar was empty, and was furnished with chairs and small circular tables. Seating himself at one of these he touched a bell, and on the appearance of the aproned, shirt-sleeved barman, called for two small bottles of pale ale.

"This gentleman—my employer—pays," he said. "I have told him," he added, turning to his companion and speaking in his own tongue, "that you are my employer. I would wish monsieur to make an attempt to control himself. There is no present cause for distress. I have no doubt that we shall find it easy to make terms. When next we meet I think the generosity of monsieur may have enabled me to make an appearance more worthy of his society."

M. Lepelletier swallowed something with great difficulty, but the color began to return slowly to his cheeks, and his staring eyes grew less ghastly. When he came to pay the barman his hand shook so that he spilled half a dozen coins upon the sawdusted floor. Ribot gathered and returned them with a gesture of respect, and the barman retired to his business in the back quarters of the house.

"To your health," said the detective, raising his glass.

"To yours," replied Lepelletier, mechanically. They drank together, and then the pretended brother of the murdered convict leaned forward with his elbows on the table and his chin upon his hands.

"M. Lepelletier is certain not to agree with me in thinking this encounter fortunate. For me, as any one may see, I am at the end of my resources. I begin to eat the mad cow, and I do not like my provender."

"I do not want many words," said Lepelletier, speaking more naturally; "what do you ask of me?" Ribot feigned to consider. He allowed his glance to rest on the other's solid gold watch chain and on the handsome ring which sparkled on the third finger of his left hand. "I warn you not to go too high," Lepelletier continued. "My resources are not large."

"Give me two hundred and fifty francs," said Ribot. "My clothes and my watch are in the care of my aunt, who is known in this country as my uncle. I can redeem them, and can myself be once more respectable in appearance if not in fact. I will present myself at your apartment in two hours' time from now. I am sharing this little enterprise with a friend, who is now outside, and who will take up his share of the duty whilst I am away. By what name shall I inquire for M. Lepelletier when I do myself the honor to call upon him?"

"Dubois," said the other. "Plain Dubois."

He made no struggle and attempted no compromise, but drawing out a pocketbook, opened it, and produced from it two five-pound notes, which he passed across to Ribot. He held the book open to show that it was empty, and Ribot nodded to show that he understood, folding up the notes meanwhile and thrusting them into one of the pockets of his tattered trousers. Then he rose, finished his glass standing, and went out quickly.

"Au revoir," he said at parting. "In two hours' time."

Lepelletier sat alone like a man stunned, but after a pause of half an hour he, too, rose and walked into the street. Here, after standing deep in thought for a moment, he raised the walking cane he carried and signalled toward a distant hansom. The driver did not see the signal, but it was observed by a rather seedy-looking foreigner who stood just behind Lepelletier, and before he could repeat it the stranger touched him lightly on the arm.

"I hope," said the seedy foreigner, in a Parisian ouvrier's French, "that m'sieur will be back in time to keep his appointment. I fear I must propose to myself to accompany m'sieur."

Once again Lepelletier's face went grey and his eyes seemed to bulge, and once again he swallowed something with extreme difficulty.

"Alors!" was all he answered, and he turned away in the direction of his lodgings, followed a little distance by the man who had accosted him. As his unsteady fingers fumbled with his latch key he took a backward glance, and saw that the man was sauntering slowly by. He let himself in at last, and mounted the steps slowly, climbing to the banister, and shuddering strongly at every step as if he had a palsy.

When he reached his own room he took a bottle of Cognac from a cupboard there, and poured out and drank a full half-tumbler of the neat spirit. The draught set him coughing violently, and he dropped into an arm-chair. When the paroxysm was over he rolled and lit a cigarette, his fingers bungling at the task and spilling a quantity of tobacco on the floor. The cigarette went out, and he at on there, still as a stone, and staring straight before him. In a while, recovering from his trance, he poured out a second liberal draft of Cognac, qualifying it this time with water, and after a sip or two got up and rummaged about the room for a cigar, and finding one at the bottom of a box, he lit it carefully, turning it about and making sure it burned level. Then he resumed his seat, throwing one leg across the other, and blowing rings of smoke into the air.

"Eh bien!" he said at last. "Monsieur Brangwyn must bleed for this. It is a lucky thing for him that a few hundred sterling a year will make no difference to him."

He had quite recovered his sang froid by this time, and sat sipping and smoking at ease, when a knock at the door announced the arrival of M. Ribot. He listened at the door and heard him proclaiming that he was expected by M. Dubois, with whom he had an appointment of importance. He continued to listen until the ascending footsteps reached the final stair of the flight immediately below him. Then he closed the door softly and returned to his arm-chair, where he composed himself anew. There was a knock at the door.

"Entrez," cried Lepelletier.

"A gentleman to see Monsieur Dubois."

"Let him come in. Ah, c'est toi! Be seated."

M. Dubois, attired in his customary fashion, hatted, gloved, booted with perfect fineness, passed a forefinger between an immaculate collar and his neck as if it galled him a little after a period of disuse, adjusted his well-cut frock coat with a double-handed tug and seated himself leisurely, carefully parting his coat tails as he did so.

"Ohe," said Lepelletier, "a metamorphosis."

"Something in that nature," Ribot answered. "But let us come to business, M. Dubois. My comrade reported to me a minute since. I hope, for your sake, there was no evasion intended."

"Yes," said Lepelletier. "Let us come to business. There was no evasion meant. My dear sir, I recognize the position and I submit. But I had supposed my own needs to be provided for the present week at least. That supposition was roughly upset this morning, and I was on my way to replenish my resources. Nothing more, parole d'honneur!".

"Things prosper with you," said Ribot, looking round the apartment, which, though not luxurious, was commodiously furnished.

"They would be well enough if they would last," Lepelletier responded.

"It is rather sudden to have done so much, n'estce pas?"

"Perhaps," the other answered, flicking at his cigar ash.

"You have found a friend?" said Ribot, inquiringly.

"Precisely."

IN HURRY FOR THE SHEETS.

Hotel Employe Said They Were Wanted for Use as Tablecloths.

Dr. Irving A. Watson, secretary of the New Hampshire state board of health, and Dr. Edward French, superintendent of the Medfield Insane asylum, relate an interesting incident of their travels together some years ago through the interior of Mexico.

After a long horseback ride up through the mountains they arrived in a small village whose apology for a public inn looked as though it had seen the sorest of hard times. But thoroughly tired out, the medical men were very glad to find a place to rest for the night, and, retiring, told their host that they should probably not arise until late the next day.

Their protracted slumbers were broken when the morning was well advanced by a pounding on the door.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the still sleepy doctors.

"It's most dinner time and we've got to have those sheets for tablecloths," was the somewhat startling reply.

China Has Longest Bridge.

The longest bridge in the world is at Sangong, China, and is called the Lion bridge. It extends five and one quarter miles over an arm of the Yellow sea and is supported by 300 huge stone arches. The roadway is seven feet above the water and is inclosed in an iron network.

First Japanese Newspaper.

The first Japanese newspaper was published in 1863, only forty-three years ago, and it contains some news translated from some of the Dutch papers. To-day Japan has 1,500 daily newspapers and periodicals.

USING DEPARTMENT 'PHONES.

A Business Man Thinks the Rule Is Too Rigidly Observed.

"It strikes me that in some of the departments they are enforcing the 'no telephoning' rule a trifle too rigidly," said a Washington business man to a reporter.

"I had occasion to telephone down to the postoffice department the other day on business regarding the interests of a surety company in which I am interested, and which goes on the bonds of a large class of the employes in the postal service.

"This is, of course, strictly official business, and there was nothing personal about it. One of the clients of the company in a western state wrote us that there was some trouble with his bond, and as we are the Washington representatives it was our duty to communicate with the department and ascertain the facts. But when I endeavored to get telephonic connection with the division where this business is transacted, and I could have obtained the necessary information nowhere else in the department, I was informed that it was against the rules to make such a connection, although I expressly stated the nature of my business.

"In consequence I had to leave my office and make the trip to this division on foot, and I wasted an hour where five minutes' time or less over the telephone would have cleared the matter up.

"While I am aware that perhaps the telephone service by clerks and their friends outside of the departments has been abused, and because thereof the general rule against these connections has been promulgated, I fail to see why the government cannot, when necessary, be communicated with by telephone through its official representatives when business men or others have official business therewith, just the same as a business house. It is certainly an unnecessary waste of time to require persons having business thus easily settled in such instances to make personal journeys to the departments where it is transacted. Questions, the answers to which do not require long research on the part of the clerks, can be answered just as readily over the telephone as in the personal presence of the business man at the department, and I think in such instances as I am referring to the rule is contracted to unnecessary limits."

DEMAND FOR "OLD PRINTS."

Are Imported in Vast Quantities—Trick of Washington Dealer.

"Old prints" are now a very fashionable decoration, and the real thing is almost impossible to obtain. But as demand invariably breeds supply, the industry of manufacturing old prints while you wait has taken its place with the manufacture of other sorts of antiques. This is an infant industry, not properly protected in this country, and the result is that the manufacture flourishes abroad, and the prints are imported in vast quantities. They are very good pieces of work, too, for those who like that sort of decoration, though the drawing and the coloring are by no means up to the standard of modern realism.

One of the curious happenings of the custom house that brought out some of the facts connected with this industry occurred recently when one of the dealers in Washington undertook to import a large collection of "old" prints for sale. They were good enough to have gotten by the customs collector as the real thing. The paper was old in texture, and carefully discolored, and the pictures were as ungainly in drawing and uncertain in coloring as the most exacting amateur critic could have desired. The dealer, in order to impart a color of realism to the proceeding, undertook to import them as genuine antiques. But he found, when it came to settling the bill, that the tariff would be several times as heavy were they listed as genuine as it would be on modern works. So he "'fessed up" and not only admitted that the "old" prints were thoroughly modern but produced the documents to prove it.

Whether he will be as frank with his customers as he was with the customs will be a matter for future determination. But it is an interesting revelation to find that such clever faking can be done in this line.

Troubles of Weather Bureau.

Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau in Washington, said at a banquet: "In the past the weather forecaster would often be a good deal embarrassed. He would start out on a picnic or an excursion, his wife in her palest and most delicate gown, he without an umbrella, and, though he had prophesied in all the papers 24 hours of perfect weather, they would both, as like as not, come home drenched. Embarrassment, truly. Like the position of the cross-eyed gentleman at the ball. This gentleman said with a bow: 'May I have the honor of this waltz?' And three ladies, seated side by side, rose simultaneously. 'With pleasure,' they said."

Back from First Vacation.

Rev. Dr. A. D. Mayo has just returned to Washington, D. C., from a summer vacation in New England, the first real vacation he has taken in the 25 years, which he has now devoted to his ministry of education in the south. He will be 84 on the last day of January next, and he has spent 61 of these years in professional and public life.

CRISIS OF GIRLHOOD

A TIME OF PAIN AND PERIL

Miss Emma Cole Says that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has Saved Her Life and Made Her Well.

How many lives of beautiful young girls have been sacrificed just as they were ripening into womanhood! How many irregularities or displacements have been developed at this important period, resulting in years of suffering!

Miss Emma Cole

A mother should come to her child's aid at this critical time and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will prepare the system for the coming change and start this trying period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities.

Miss Emma Cole of Tullahoma, Tenn., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"I want to tell you that I am enjoying better health than I have for years, and I owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"When fourteen years of age I suffered almost constant pain, and for two or three years I had soreness and pain in my side, headaches and was dizzy and nervous, and doctors all failed to help me.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended, and after taking it my health began to improve rapidly, and I think it saved my life. I sincerely hope my experience will be a help to other girls who are passing from girlhood to womanhood, for I know your Compound will do as much for them."

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice ask her to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and she will receive free advice which will put her on the right road to a strong, healthy and happy womanhood. Mrs. Pinkham is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge.

Many a man has the tired feeling because of his strenuous efforts to avoid work.

Long Took No Chances.

Commander Alexander Sharp, Jr., now of the cruiser Chattanooga, was naval aid to Theodore Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy at the outbreak of the Spanish war, and he applied for the command of a vessel. He was then only a lieutenant and was not entitled to a large vessel. John D. Long, secretary of the navy, decided to assign him to command the Josephine.

"Mr. Secretary," said Sharp, "my wife's name is Josephine, and I wish you would change the name of the yacht I'm to command."

"And what does Mrs. Sharp say?" asked Mr. Long.

"She said," answered Sharp, "that if you kept the name it would be the only Josephine I ever commanded."

"Ah," said the secretary of the navy, "I shall change the vessel's name to Vixen."

And the Vixen she became.

WORST CASE OF ECZEMA.

Spread Rapidly Over Body—Limbs and Arms Had to Be Bandaged—Marvelous Cure by Cuticura.

"My son, who is now twenty-two years of age, when he was four months old began to have eczema on his face, spreading quite rapidly until he was nearly covered. We had all the doctors around us, and some from larger places, but no one helped him a particle. The eczema was something terrible, and the doctors said it was the worst case they ever saw. At times his whole body and face were covered, all but his feet. I had to bandage his limbs and arms; his scalp was just dreadful. A friend teased me to try Cuticura, and I began to use all three of the Cuticura Remedies. He was better in two months, and in six months he was well. Mrs. R. L. Risley, Piermont N. H., Oct. 24, 1905."

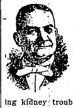
"THE MARRYING SQUIRE."

Justice Geo. E. Law, of Brazil, Ind., Has Married 1,400 Couples.



Justice Geo. E. Law, of Brazil, Ind., has fairly earned the title of "The Marrying Squire," by which he is known far and wide, having already married some 1,400 couples. Ten years ago he was deputy county treasurer. "At that time," said Justice Law, "I was suffering from an annoying kidney trouble. My back ached, my rest was broken at night, and the passages of the kidney secretions were too frequent and contained sediment. Three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills cured me in 1897, and for the past nine years I have been free from kidney complaint and backache."

WHY HE DID IT.

The Cigar Dealer Appealed to Curiosity of Public.

In the window of a cigar store in Columbus avenue, New York, appears in bold black letters the following sign:

"No Paregoric, Postage Stamps, Hair Oil or Soap Sold Here."

Just why such a sign should appear in the window of a tobacconist's shop mystifies the neighbors. A neighbor was impelled to quiz, and for the sake of good fellowship, he purchased a cigar.

"Why have you placed that odd sign in your window?" he asked. The tobacco man smiled. "I guess you've found out. You bought a cigar," he answered with a smile. The neighbor left illuminated. The proprietor is hoping that others may seek to be enlightened in the same manner. "Make 'em curious and you've got 'em," he confessed to the reporter, who also found out—for 10 cents.

In Praise of Prize Fights.

In a discussion of a recent brutal prize fight, a young lady of Charleston asked Dr. Ellison Capers, bishop of South Carolina, if he did not disapprove of prize fighting.

"On the contrary," Dr. Capers answered, "I approve of it heartily. You see, it always offers the probability of two brutes getting a good thrashing."

A DOCTOR'S TRIALS.

He Sometimes Gets Sick Like Other People.

Even doing good to people is hard work if you have too much of it to do.

No one knows this better than the hard-working, conscientious family doctor. He has troubles of his own—often gets caught in the rain or snow, or loses so much sleep he sometimes gets out of sorts. An overworked Ohio doctor tells his experience:

"About three years ago as the result of doing two men's work, attending a large practice and looking after the details of another business, my health broke down completely, and I was little better than a physical wreck.

"I suffered from indigestion and constipation, loss of weight and appetite, bloating and pain after meals, loss of memory and lack of nerve force for continued mental application.

"I became irritable, easily angered and despondent without cause. The heart's action became irregular and weak, with frequent attacks of palpitation during the first hour of two after retiring.

"Some Grape-Nuts and cut bananas came for my lunch one day and pleased me particularly with the result. I got more satisfaction from it than from anything I had eaten for months, and on further investigation and use, adopted Grape-Nuts for my morning and evening meals, served usually with cream and a sprinkle of salt or sugar.

"My improvement was rapid and permanent in weight as well as in physical and mental endurance. In a word, I am filled with the joy of living again, and continue the daily use of Grape-Nuts for breakfast and often for the evening meal.

"The little pamphlet, 'The Road to Wellville,' found in pkgs., is invariably saved and handed to some needy patient along with the indicated remedy." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

HE HELD THE BEAR

CASE WHEN TURN ABOUT WAS FAIR PLAY.

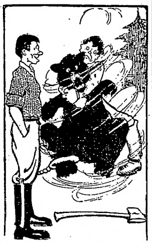
Stephen Had Done His Part, and Allowed Brother Experience of Mastering Angry Bruin Almost Out of Trap.

Stephen Allard was born in New Durham, N. H., in 1770, and died in 1870. He was a unique and somewhat eccentric character, and was known throughout the Pequawke country as "Steve the Bear Hunter." Many anecdotes are still related of him. The following is a well authenticated one:

He had set a bear trap in a plot of corn about a quarter of a mile from his residence. His brother David was a guest at his house. Stephen went early in the morning to see if any bears had been among the corn during the night, not expecting one to get into the trap the first night. As he arrived at the corn he heard the rattle of the trap, and found a bear caught by the toes of one forward foot. One glance convinced him that the hold of the trap was weakening. He seized the chain when Bruin instantly rose on his hind legs and made for him.

Without hesitation, he closed in with the bear, and, being a powerful man, suceceded in soon getting the mastery, and called to David to come quickly and bring an ax with him.

After considerable delay, and when Stephen's patience had become exhausted, David arrived with the ax. Stephen berated him, in language not fit to print, for his tardiness, and in explanation David said that, breakfast being ready, and not thinking there was any necessity for hurrying, he stopped and ate his breakfast. Stephen said: "Dave, hold this 'ere b'ar, and let me kill him."



"Now, Dave, Hold Fast."

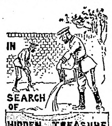
David was loth to do so, but to appease Stephen's wrath, finally did as requested. When Stephen saw David had a firm hold on the bear, he threw the ax out of David's reach and said: "Now, Dave, hold fast that varmint while I go to the house and get my breakfast."

Stephen went and got his meal and then returned and killed the bear.

TELLS OF HIDING PLACE.

Water Quickly Reveals Location of Buried Treasure.

This method—more certain than the operation of digging—for finding, say, treasure or stolen goods recently buried in the earth, is well known to the soldiers of some Continental armies, and also to the police of most countries. Water is poured copiously upon the ground and left to soak in; when, exactly over the place where the treasure lies hidden, a depression—dotted lines—caused by the sinking down of the earth, is to be noticed. Then the spade usefully goes to work.



Suffers from Rare Disease.

Suffering from a rare disease, the most marked symptom of which is a decay or crumbling of certain of the vertebrae of the spinal column, John P. Miller, of New York, is interesting the surgeons of Fordham hospital. Miller is unable to stoop over and touch his toes, but can bend backward with ease, the bones and muscles of his back being as supple as rubber. The surgeons of the hospital have had six consultations over his case within as many weeks, and have had several prominent surgeons of the city in the hospital to consult with them as to the best way to attempt to cure the case. Some of the surgeons think that by opening the spine to the seat of the trouble they may be able to treat the part in such a way as to arrest the dissolution of the bone.

RHEUMATISM STAYS CURED

Mrs. Cota, Confined to Bed and in Constant Pain, Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Rheumatism can be inherited and that fact proves it to be a disease of the blood. It is necessary, therefore, to treat it through the blood if a permanent cure is expected. External applications may give temporary relief from pain but as long as the poisonous acid is in the blood the pain will return, perhaps in a new place, but it will surely return. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure rheumatism because they go directly to the seat of the disorder, purifying and enriching the blood.

Mrs. Henry Cota, of West Cheshire, Conn., is the wife of the village machinist. "Several years ago," she says, "I was laid up with rheumatism in my feet, ankles and knees. I was in constant pain and sometimes the affected parts would swell so badly that I could not get about at all to attend to my household duties. There was one period of three weeks during which I was confined to the bed. My sufferings were awful and the doctor's medicine did not help me.

"One day a neighbor told me about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. After I had taken them a short time I was decidedly better and a few more boxes cured me. What is better, the cure was permanent."

Remember Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do not act on the bowels. They make new blood and restore shattered nerves. They tone up the stomach and restore impaired digestion, bring healthful, refreshing sleep, give strength to the weak and make miserable, complaining people strong, hungry and energetic. They are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

The Original Porous Plaster.

It's Allcock's, first introduced to the people sixty years ago, and to-day undoubtedly has the largest sale of any external remedy—millions being sold annually all over the world. There have been imitations, to be sure, but never has there been one to even compare with Allcock's—the world's standard external remedy.

For a weak back, cold on the chest or any local pain, the result of taking cold or over-strain, nothing we know of compares with this famous plaster.

There seems to be a good argument for every religion, and for no religion; in fact, there is a good argument for everything, except drinking whisky. Nobody attempts to defend that habit.

THE WINNING STROKE

If more than ordinary skill in playing brings the honors of the game to the winning player, so exceptional merit in a remedy ensures the commendation of the well informed, and as a reasonable amount of outdoor life and recreation is conducive to the health and strength, so does a perfect laxative tend to one's improvement in cases of constipation, biliousness, headaches, etc. It is all important, however, in selecting a laxative, to choose one of known quality and excellence, like the ever pleasant Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., a laxative which sweetens and cleanses the system effectually, when a laxative is needed, without any unpleasant after effects, as it acts naturally and gently on the internal organs, simply assisting nature when nature needs assistance, without griping, irritating or debilitating the internal organs in any way, as it contains nothing of an objectionable or injurious nature. As the plants which are combined with the figs in the manufacture of Syrup of Figs are known to physicians to act most beneficially upon the system, the remedy has met with their general approval as a family laxative, a fact well worth considering in making purchases.

It is because of the fact that SYRUP OF FIGS is a remedy of known quality and excellence, and approved by physicians that has led to its use by so many millions of well informed people, who would not use any remedy of uncertain quality or inferior reputation. Every family should have a bottle of the genuine on hand at all times, to use when a laxative remedy is required. Please to remember that the genuine Syrup of Figs is for sale in bottles of one size only, by all reputable druggists, and that full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co., is plainly printed on the front of every package. Regular price, 50c per bottle.

GOLDEN NUGGETS FOR SALLOW PEOPLE

DO YOU KNOW

That a crafty man isn't necessarily a sailor.

That humility is the virtue that hobbles about on crutches.

That life is not worth living unless you live for the good you can do.

That in football it's a touchdown and in matrimony it's a shakedown.

That the less husbands and wives have to say about jealousy the better.

That football players ought to be able to travel on their cheek in after years.

That perhaps you may have noticed that rich relatives usually live to a ripe old age.

That you should never judge a man's worth by the amount of life insurance he carries.

That if you think a man's children are intelligent, you ought to get him to tell you about his bird dog.

That when his patients die a doctor excuses himself on the grounds that they failed to follow his advice.

That it's the man who never does anything who is always Johnny-on-the spot when it comes to telling how things should be done.

That a large degree of mother's patience is due less to her goodness than to her blind belief that her child's badness is not really badness.

That of course the dear children are enthusiastic about Christmas; they have things given to them, and are not expected to give anything in return.

That when a boy is very young, he will gladly own a dog of any kind, but after he reaches eight years old he insists on owning a mister dog.

That if any of the children get up in time to start the fire, or even before the house is thoroughly warm, it means that mother does not rule the home.

That we have "marrying on trial" already. If you don't believe it look at the number of divorce cases on the docket of every court with jurisdiction.

That the only way a woman can get her husband to read the letters she receives from her kin is to hide them carefully away after she has read them, giving him the impression that she is keeping something from him.

RHEUMATISM
CAN NOT BE RUBBED AWAY

It is perfectly natural to rub the spot that hurts, and when the muscles, nerves, joints and bones are throbbing and twitching with the pains of Rheumatism the sufferer is apt to turn to the liniment bottle, or some other external application, in an effort to get relief from the disease, by producing counter-irritation on the flesh. Such treatment will quiet the pain temporarily, but can have no direct curative effect on the real disease because it does not reach the blood, where the cause is located. Rheumatism is more than skin deep—it is rooted and grounded in the blood and can only be reached by constitutional treatment—IT CANNOT BE RUBBED AWAY. Rheumatism is due to an excess of uric acid in the blood, brought about by the accumulation in the system of refuse matter which the natural avenues of bodily waste, the Bowels and Kidneys, have failed to carry off. This refuse matter, coming in contact with the different acids of the body, forms uric acid which is absorbed into the blood and distributed to all parts of the body, and Rheumatism gets possession of the system. The aches and pains are only symptoms, and though they may be scattered or relieved for a time by surface treatment, they will reappear at the first exposure to cold or dampness, or after an attack of indigestion or other irregularity. Rheumatism can never be permanently cured while the circulation remains saturated with irritating, pain-producing uric acid poison. The disease will shift from muscle to muscle or joint to joint, settling on the nerves, causing inflammation and swelling and such terrible pains that the nervous system is often shattered, the health undermined, and perhaps the patient becomes deformed and crippled for life. S. S. S. thoroughly cleanses the blood and renovates the circulation by neutralizing the acids and expelling all foreign matter from the system. It warms and invigorates the blood so that instead of a weak, sour stream, constantly depositing acrid and corrosive matter in the muscles, nerves, joints and bones, the body is fed and nourished by rich, health-sustaining blood which completely and permanently cures Rheumatism. S. S. S. is composed of both purifying and tonic properties—just what is needed in every case of Rheumatism. It contains no potash, alkali or other mineral ingredient, but is made entirely of purifying, healing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks. If you are suffering from Rheumatism do not waste valuable time trying to rub a blood disease away, but begin the use of S. S. S. and write us about your case and our physicians will give you any information or advice desired free of charge and will send our special treatise on Rheumatism.

COMMERCIAL CLUB IN MONTHLY SESSION

Matters of Interest to Red Lake Falls Discussed by the Organization.

The regular monthly meeting of the Red Lake Falls Commercial club was held at the city hall on Monday evening. The matter of supporting the coming tournament of the Northern Minnesota Fire association to be held here in June was discussed at some length, the result being the unanimous support of the club to make the tournament a success.

Three new members were taken into the club and the resignation of W. S. Cox, former secretary of the club was received and accepted. Mr. Cox's successor will be elected at the January meeting.

A motion to reduce the salary of the future secretary was carried.

Combined Door Knob and Bell.

A western inventor has recently introduced a combination door knob and door bell, which serves to give warning of the entrance of any one, and minimizes the danger of sneak thieves. The door knob is hollow and is made in two parts, the outer part forming the gong. Within the gong are a couple of balls, which are operated by means of gearing connected with a spindle to sound the gong whenever the spindle is turned, thus giving the alarm. To keep your mind and body in good trim, drink golden grain belt beer. It is pure, wholesome and nourishing and the ideal home beverage. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

OCTOBER TAX STATEMENT.

NEW MILL COMING HERE

Woolen Mill Will Locate at Red Lake Falls in the Near Future—Facilities Ideal.

On last Thursday afternoon a citizens meeting was held here to discuss the erection and operation of a woolen mill.

Claude and John Nelson, both at present connected with the woolen mill at Fosston, were here to look over the ground and discuss the matter with the citizens of Red Lake Falls. Both were favorably impressed with the water power possibilities and the location in general.

They ask no bonus of any kind. Only asking the hearty co-operation and support of the business men and citizens of our city.

A proposition of this kind should not be overlooked at this this time, as it means much to the merchants in particular and the surrounding country in general.

The cost of such a plant wouldn't exceed, at the outside $8,000, while the business done by a mill of this size would be about $50,000 to $60,000 a year.

Messrs. Neilson are both well known to prominent business men of our city as men of ability and integrity and many of our citizens expressed a willingness at the meeting to support the new enterprise.

The mill, if erected would employ a force, to start with, of from 40 to 50 people, many of whom would bring their families to Red Lake Falls, increasing the business of the merchants. The farmers would find a ready market for their wool, close by, bringing many here who would otherwise go elsewhere to market their wool. This, too, would be no small item to the merchants.

The growth of Red Lake Falls depends almost entirely on enterprises of this kind and there is no time like the present to get in and make a beginning.

The matter is now up to the board of directors of the Commercial club, who will meet and discuss the matter this week. There seems to be little doubt of favorable action of the club, and the outlook for the mill is, to say the least, very bright.

GOOD TIME COMING.

The social event of the season will take place at the Metropolitan Opera house on New Year's eve, when the fire department will give its annual ball. All arrangements are practically complete for the event and the proceeds of the ball will be used to make the coming tournament a success. Not a citizen of Red Lake Falls and vicinity should miss this. All those "who are who" will be present.

Supper will be served at Mrs. M. V. Hall's restaurant.

AMOUNT ALMOST RAISED.

The committee who are soliciting funds for the Red River Immigration and Development association reported to the Commercial club on Monday evening that they had practically raised the amount needed to carry on the work. Messrs. Schreiter and Farley acted as the committee.

BOY BADLY BURNED.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES: ATHENIAN PROGRAM

Notes and Doings of the High School. Edited by the Athenian Society.

The Spartan society rendered a program last Friday afternoon.

At every program this year there has been a debate. Last Friday the question was "Resolved that summer is more enjoyable than winter." Viola Brady spoke for the affirmative, and Ida Matthies for the negative.

The Athenians will give the following program next Friday afternoon:

Original story	Lillian Brady
Newspaper	Olaf Floan
Recitation	Annie Rush
Vocal Solo	Alice Ericson
Recitation	Alfred Floan
Reading	Ina Linnihan
Recitation	Florence Hennemuth
Reading	Beatrice Emard
Debate	Freda Itner and Lillie Zaiser.

Seniors of '05-'06 please put up your frieze.

The question is often asked, "Will Science prove detrimental to Literary accomplishments?" Some of the seniors find Physics a hindrance to their literary development for they do not enjoy the sessions after school that are forced upon them by the new program.

Friday night some of the pupils enjoyed a sleighing party, Miss Wilson acting as chaperon.

The Sophomores are studying synonyms and antonyms. They certainly possess an enormous vocabulary.

One of the Ancient History pupils made the remark, "I cant remember how all those old kings died."

GRADE NOTES

Manual training on a small scale is being introduced into our schools. Mr. Chamberlain, acting on some suggestions received from Prof. Grum of the Moorhead Normal has procured a goodly amount of raw material and is having the upper grade pupils prepare it for other work to be done by lower grade pupils. The raw material costs but one-tenth as much as the same material cost ready prepared last year.

So many of the members of the sixth grade failed in two arithmetic tests that a test will be given every day until all the members can get a passing mark.

The attendance in third and fourth grades has been exceptionally good the past month.

TOURNAMENT IS ASSURED

Enthusiastic Meeting of the Commercial Club Promises Firemen Their Hearty Support.

Hurrah for the fire tournament.

We will have a tournament here next June that will open the eyes of other towns in the association.

This was shown at the meeting of the Commercial Club Monday night, when the support of everybody in town was practically assured.

An able talk for the help of the citizens by Mr. F. A. Grady brought a ready response from those present and the tournament was assured.

The local department is one of which we may be justly proud and their record at tournaments held in the past is no mean one, there being few if any cities in the association who have taken as many prizes as our local lads.

the meeting will bring many people to the city and a good time will provided for them by the able committees in chare of the work.

President Converse of the association, Ernest Buse and Fred Borchers were appointed to look after the financial support of the citizens, while the matter of a suitable ground and grandstand will be looked after by the fire boys.

WOODMEN ELECT OFFICERS.

There was a well attended meeting at the Woodmen hall last Wednesday evening. The business of the camp was gone through with in a hurry. The nomination and election of officers took place resulting as follows: Frank Brouillet, V. C.; James Hance, W. A.; Dan Doran, clerk; Joe Salley, banker; S. E. Hunt, Escort; M. Pinsonnault sentinel; Alex Rose, watchman; H. H. Hennemuth, T. A. Crompe, and H. C. Hanson, Trustees. The reports of the officers show the camp to be in a flourishing condition and a proposition was made to reduce the local dues for the coming year which was voted favorably upon by the members. The woodmen have a nice lodge room and should command a larger attendance.

POSTAL REGULATIONS.

With the approach of Christmas the postal authorities and postmasters experience a great deal of trouble with improperly wrapped and addressed Christmas packages. It would be well for those sending such packages through the mails to see that packages are well wrapped properly addressed and have a return card attached. The registry laws are here given:

"All valuable letters and parcels, as well as those without intrinsic value, the correct delivery of which is of importance, should be sent in registered mails.

"The registry fee is 8 cents for each separate letter or parcel, in addition to the postage, both to be fully prepaid with postage stamps attached to the letter or parcel.

"In case of its loss, the sender of a registerd article prepaid at the letter rate of postage, mailed at, and addressed to, a United States postoffice, is indemnified for its value up to $25."

Go to the Merchants State Bank for real estate loans.

PRESENTED WITH PIN.

When our friend and fellow-workman, Carl Peterson, left for Williston Monday he was presented with a remembrance in the shape of a handsome stick pin by his friends among "the boys."

A WARNING!

The postal authorities at Washington have called the attention of the public to the following postal law: "Any person circulating or causing to be circulated through the mails any letter or mail matter which contains language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, defamatory or threatening character or that reflects injuriously upon the character or conduct of another may be, upon conviction of each and every offense, fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned at hard labor for not more than five years, or both, at the decreation of the court."

Ignorance of the law is no excuse.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The following is a synopsis of the president's message:

The president in opening says: "As a ation we still continue to enjoy a literlly unprecedented prosperity, and it is robable that only reckless speculation ad disregard of legitimate business iethods on the part of the business orld can materially mar this prosperity.

"No congress in our times has done iore good work of importance than the resent congress. There were several iatters left unfinished at your last seson, however, which I most earnestly one you will complete before your adiurnment."

The president again recommends a law rohibiting all corporations from conributing to the campaign expenses of ny party.

The urgent necessity of enacting into iw the bill which passed one house of ongress, conferring upon the government he right of appeal in criminal cases on uestions of law, is strongly advocated. he president says: "A failure to pass it ill result in seriously hampering the overnment in its effort to secure justice, specially against wealthy individuals or orporations who do wrong, and may also revent the government from obtaining ustice for wageworkers who are not hemselves able effectively to contest a ase where the judgment of an inferior ourt has been against them. I have pecifically in view a recent decision by district judge leaving railway employes vithout remedy for violation of a certain so-called labor statute.

"It seems an absurdity to permit a single district judge, against what may be the judgment of the immense majority of his colleagues on the bench, to declare a law solemnly enacted by the congress to be 'unconstitutional' and then to deny to the government the right to have the supreme court definitely decide the question.

"The importance of enacting into law the particular bill in question is further increased by the fact that the government has now definitely begun a policy of resorting to the criminal law in those trust and interstate commerce cases where such a course offers a reasonable chance of success. The action of the government in finally deciding, in certain cases, to undertake criminal proceedings was justifiable, and, though there have been some conspicuous failures in these cases, we have had many instances which undoubtedly had a deterrent effect upon evildoers, whether the penalty inflicted was in the shape of fine or imprisonment, and penalties of both kinds have already been inflicted by the courts."

The president urges the passage of a law which will stop the habit of setting aside the judgments of inferior courts on technicalities absolutely unconnected with the merits of the case and where there is no attempt to show that there has been any failure of substantial justice.

The abuse of the injunctive power in labor cases should be guarded against, according to the president, who urges the passage of such a law as he advocated last year.

He says: "There must be no hesitation in dealing with disorder. But there must likewise be no such abuse of the injunctive power as is implied in forbidding laboring men to strive for their own betterment in peaceful and lawful ways, nor must the injunction be used merely to aid some big corporation in carrying out schemes for its own aggrandizement."

In connection with the delays of the law, the president calls attention to the prevalence of crime and the epidemic of lynching and mob violence that springs up, now in one part of the country, now in another. The greatest existing cause of lynching is the perpetration, especially by black men, of the hideous crime of rape—the most abominable in all the category of crimes; even worse than murder. Mobs frequently avenge the commission of this crime by themselves torturing to death the man committing it, thus avenging in bestial fashion a bestial deed and reducing themselves to a level with the criminal. "In my judgment the crime of rape should be punished with death, as is the case with murder, and provision should be made by which the punishment may follow immediately upon the heels of the offense. Let justice be both sure and swift, but let it be justice under the law, and not the wild and crooked savagery of a mob."

In dealing with the question of labor and capital the president says there is one thing more important to remember than aught else, and that is the infinite harm done by preachers of mere discontent. These are the men who seek to excite a violent class hatred against all men of wealth. They seek to turn wise and proper movements for the better control of corporations and for doing away with the abuses connect with wealth into a campaign of hysterical excitement and falsehood, in which the aim is to inflame to madness the brutal passions of mankind.

"In reality they are the worst enemies of the cause they profess to advocate, just as the purveyors of sensational slander in newspaper or magazine are the worst enemies of all men who are engaged in an honest effort to better what is bad in our social and governmental conditions.

"To preach hatred of the rich mas as such, to carry on a campaign of slander and invective against him, to seek to mislead and inflame to madness honest men whose lives are hard and who have not the kind of mental training which will permit them to appreciate the danger in doctrines preached—all is to commit a crime against the body politic and to be false to every worthy principle and tradition of American national life.

"The man who debauches others in order to obtain high office stands on an evil equality of corruption with the man who debauches others for financial profit, and when hatred is sown the crop which springs can only be evil."

The president again urges the passage of a bill limiting the hours of labor of railway employes. He says: "It should be our aim steadily to reduce the number of hours of labor, with as a goal the general introduction of an eight-hour day."

On the Isthmus of Panama, he says, the conditions are such that an eight-hour day would be absurd, just as it is absurd, so far as the isthmus in concerned, where white labor cannot be employed, to bother as to whether the work is done by alien black men or by alien yellow men.

A thorough investigation of the conditions of child labor and of the labor of women in the United States is again urged.

The president recommends that the employers' liability law be amended to place the entire "risk of trade" upon the employer.

The enactment of a law providing for the compulsory investigation of controversies between employer and employe is urged.

The president thinks it is not wise that the nation should alienate its remaining coal lands. "I have withdrawn temporarily from settlement all the lands which the geological survey has indicated as containing, or in all probability containing, coal. The question, however, can be propely settled only by legislation, which, in my judgment, should provide for the withdrawal of these lands from sale or from entry, save in certain especial circumstances."

On the subject of corporations the president says: "The present congress has taken long strides in the direction of securing proper supervision and control by the national government over corporations engaged in interstate business. The passage of the railway rate bill, and only to a lesser degree the passage of the pure food bill and the provision for increasing and rendering more effective national control over the beef-packing industry, mark an important advance in the proper direction. All these laws have already justified their enactment. The interstate commerce law, for instance, has rather amusingly falsified the prediction both of those who asserted that it would ruin the railroads and of those who asserted that it would not go far enough and would accomplish nothing. During the last five months the railroads have shown increased earnings and some of them unusual dividends, while during the same period the mere taking effect of the law has produced an unprecedented, a hitherto unheard of numbers of voluntary reductions in freights and fares by the railroads. There will ultimately be need of enlarging the powers of the interstate commerce commission so as to give it larger and more efficient control over the railroads. In some method, whether by a national license law or in other fashion we must exercise, and that at an early date, a far more complete control than at present over these great corporations—a control that will tend to put a stop to the securing of inordinate profits by favored individuals at the expense whether of the general public, the stockholders or the wageworkers.

"The best way to avert the very undesirable move for government ownership of railways is to secure by the government, on behalf of the people as a whole, such adequate control and regulation of the great interstate common carriers as will do away with the evils which give rise to the agitation against them.

"Combination of capital, like combination of labor, is a necessary element of our present industrial system. It is not possible completely to prevent it, and, if it were possible, such complete prevention would do damage to the body politic. What we need is not vainly to try to prevent all combinations, but to secure such rigorous and adequate control and supervision of the combinations as to prevent their injuring the public."

The president urgently recommends the enactment of a graduated inheritance tax and, if possible, a graduated income tax. The man of great wealth owes a peculiar obligation to the state and should assume his proper share of the burden of taxation.

"The only other persons whose welfare is as vital to the welfare of the whole country as is the welfare of the wageworkers are the tillers of the soil, the farmers. There is no longer any failure to realize that farming, at least in certain branches, must become a technical and scientific profession. This means that there must be open to farmers the chance for technical and scientific training, not theoretical merely, but of the most severely practical type. The farmer represents a peculiarly high type of American citizenship, and he must have the same chance to rise and develop as other American citizens have.

"While in the long run voluntary effort will prove more efficacious than government assistance, while the farmers must primarily do most for themselves, yet the government can also do much. The department of agriculture has broken new ground in many directions, and year by year it finds how it can improve its methods and develop fresh usefulness. Its constant effort is to give the governmental assistance in the most effective way: that is, through association of farmers rather than to or through individual farmers. It is also striving to coordinate its work with the agricultural departments of the several states, and, so far as its own work is educational, to co-ordinate it with the work of other educational authorities."

No government policy for the betterment of our internal conditions has been more fruitful of good than the policy of irrigation and forest preservation.

In the judgment of the president the whole subject of marriage and divorce should be relegated to the authority of congress.

The passage of a law to encourage the development of American shipping is again urged.

The president declares that our currency system is seriously defective and that there is need of a change. No especial plan is pressed, but the president emphasizes the necessity for careful consideration of the subject by congress.

The president expressed the hope that the bill to provide a lower tariff for or absolute free trade in Philippine products will become a law. "No harm will come to any American industry," he says, "and, while there will be some small but real material benefit to the Filipinos, the main benefit will come by the showing made as to our purpose to do all in our power for their welfare."

American citizenship for the citizens of Porto Rico is recommended.

The president declares that there must be a complete reorganization of the governmental system of Alaska.

The attitude of hostility here and there assumed toward the Japanese in this country comes in for a large share of the president's attention. He says: "This hostility is sporadic and is limited to a very few places. Nevertheless, it is most discreditable to us as a people and it may be fraught with gravest consequences to us as a nation.

"The Japanese have won in a single generation the right to stand abreast of the foremost and enlightened people of Europe and America; they have won on their own merits and by their own exertions the right to treatment on a basis of full and frank equality. The overwhelming mass of our people cherish a lively regard and respect for the people of Japan, and in almost every quarter of the Union the stranger from Japan is treated as he deserves; that is, he is treated as the stranger from any part of civilized Europe is and deserves to be treated. But here and there a most unworthy feeling has manifested itself toward the Japanese—the feeling that has been shown in shutting them out from the common schools in San Francisco and in mutterings against them in one or two places because of their efficiency as workers. To shut them out from the public schools is a wicked absurdity. We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us, and no nation is fit to teach unless it is also willing to learn."

The president recommends the passage of an act providing for the naturalization of Japanese who come here intending to become American citizens. He also recommends that the civil and criminal statutes be so amended as to enable the president, acting for the United States government, which is responsible in our international relations, to enforce the rights of aliens under treaties.

The president enters into an extended explanation of the causes which compelled American intervention in Cuba. He declares that when the election has been held and the new government inaugurated in peaceful and orderly fashion the provisional government will come to an end.

The work of the international conference of American republics, held at Rio de Janeiro, is dwelt upon at length. The president says that many matters of importance relating to the extension of trade, the increase of communications, the smoothing away of barriers to free intercourse and the promotion of a better knowledge and good understanding between the countries represented were discussed and the conclusions formulated in a series of resolutions which will be presented to congress. He points to the cordiality with which Secretary Root was received in the different countries which he visited as evidence of the strong friendship existing between the United States and its neighbors to the south.

The president promises to report later, at length on the whole subject of the Panama canal.

"We should as a nation do everything in our power for the cause of honorable peace. It is morally as indefensible for a nation to commit a wrong upon another nation, strong or weak, as for an individual thus to wrong his fellows. We should do all in our power to hasten the day when there shall be peace among the nations—a peace based upon justice and not upon cowardly submission to wrong.

"The United States navy is the surest guarantee of peace which this country possesses. I do not ask that we continue to increase our navy. I ask merely that it be maintained at its present strength, and this can be done only if we replace the obsolete and outworn ships by new and good ones, the equals of any afloat in the navy.

"In both the army and navy there is urgent need that everything possible be done to maintain the highest standard for the personnel alike as regards the officers and enlisted men. There should soon be an increase in the number of men for our coast defenses. These men should be of the right type and properly trained, and there should therefore be an increase of pay for certain skilled grades, especially in the coast artillery. Money should be appropriated to permit troops to be massed in body and exercised in manuevers, particularly in marching. Such exercise during the summer just passed has been of incalculable benefit to the army and should under no circumstances be discontinued.

"The readiness and efficiency of both the army and navy in dealing with the recent crisis in Cuba illustrate afresh their value to the nation. This readiness and efficiency would have been very much less had it not been for the existence of the general staff in the army and the general board in the navy. Both are essential to the proper development and use of our military forces afloat and ashore."

CALIFORNIA FIRM IN JAP DISPUTE

STATE IS REBELLIOUS, IF NOT IN A STATE OF REBELLION.

MUST STOP INVASION OF JAPS

SWARMING INTO CALIFORNIA AT THE RATE OF A THOUSAND A MONTH.

San Francisco, Dec. 6.—California is rebellious, if not in a state of rebellion. Standing on its new problem, or rather on the new phase of an older problem, the Golden State has raised the banner of state rights and has declared more strongly on the color question than ever the South declared since the recent unpleasantness.

California is not afraid of war. It wants no war with the rest of the United States, but demands a "friendly fight" in the supreme court to decide whether or not California shall have the right to rule itself in local matters and handle the color question in its own way.

Does Not Seek War.

Neither does California seek a war with Japan. In fact, Californians laugh at such an idea, but here on the strip of land which must stand the brunt of the battering if ever Japan and the United States go to war, there is no man who fears Japan.

"The school board of San Francisco never will change its attitude on the school question," declared the superintendent of schools.

"President Roosevelt's requests, or orders, will be ignored by us. The Japanese must stay in their own school."

Japs Are "Chesty."

"If California is to remain one of the United States," declared the commissioner of labor of California, "then it must stop this invasion and settle the question. If we do not settle the Japanese question soon our children will settle it, or try to settle it, from the other side of the Sierras. The Japanese are swarming into California at the rate of over a thousand a month—more arrogant, more chesty than any other people. They do not demand equality. They want an acknowledgment of their superiority."

TOWN SWEPT AWAY.

Wall of Water Descends Upon Clifton, Ariz., Causing Great Havoc.

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 6.—Reports have been received here that the town of Clifton, Ariz., has been practically washed away by floods, and that fifty persons have lost their lives. The Detroit concentrator dam broke, sending a great wall of water down Chase creek.

Wires are down between Morenci and Clifton, and all attempts to communicate with the stricken town are futile.

The central telephone station at Clifton has been abandoned, having been declared unsafe.

The Copper Queen hotel at Clifton is said to have been swept away.

Reports have also reached Phoenix, Ariz., that fifty persons were drowned in the floods at Clifton.

The Coronodo railway, from Clifton to Longfellow, is destroyed. It will be several weeks before business can be resumed over the road. The financial loss cannot be estimated.

Floods on the Isthmus.

Colon, Dec. 6.—Up to last night ten inches of water had fallen in Colon during twenty-four hours. The Chagres river has reached the highest point ever known and is still rising fast. Communication and traffic by way of the Panama railroad are interrupted. The inhabitants of the village north of Bas Obisobo will suffer greatly from the flood, as it will be impossible to get relief to them unless the Chagres subsides.

There has been no telegraphic communication with Panama since yesterday.

ARE NOW MOVING MORE GRAIN

RAILROADS GIVE BETTER SERVICE—MAY ASK FEDERAL INTERFERENCE.

Minneapolis, Dec. 6. — Evidence of the beginning of better railroad service in the congested area is shown in the table for yesterday's grain receipts, in which wheat coming into Minneapolis exceeds the total of a week ago by 113 cars, but the quantity moved in by the roads traversing North Dakota's blocked territory shows an increase of 144 cars. Coal dealers are ready to co-operate with grain producers and shippers of the Northwest in seeking to prevent a repetition of the transportation conditions of this year. Through its regular and official organ, the Northwestern Coal Dealer, it is announced that the association is ready to undertake radical measures to secure relief by asking federal interference.

Cameron, charging him with contempt and obstruction of justice, and the postponement until Dec. 17 of the conspiracy hearing of Common Councilman William A. The result of this decision will be to place the defendants on trial to answer the indictments.

DEVASTATED BY BLAST AND FIRE

BOILER EXPLOSION CAUSES DISASTROUS FIRE AT WEST LYNN, MASS.

TWO ACRES ARE BURNED OVER

FOURTEEN BUILDINGS DESTROYED, WITH LOSS OF $520,000—ELEVEN HURT.

Lynn, Mass., Dec. 8.—The explosion of a boiler yesterday in the four-story factory building of the P. J. Harney Shoe Manufacturing company, on Alley street, and the fire which immediately followed destroyed fourteen buildings in the West Lynn manufacturing district, causing a total loss estimated at about $520,000. Eleven persons were injured, one, Miss Celia Tradinburg, an operator in one of the burned factories, being in a critical condition at a hospital. On account of the fire the manufacturers will suffer severely from the interruption to their Christmas business.

Two Acres Burned Over.

The explosion, besides shattering the big four-story factory of the Harney company, wrecked several buildings near by in the crowded manufacturing district. A heavy southeast gale soon drove the flames beyond the control of the local fire department, and help was called from Boston.

In an hour's time two acres in the West Lynn district had been burned over, ruining the premises of more than half a dozen large business firms, mostly shoe manufacturers, destroying twelve dwellings on Charles street, principally occupied by colored people. The explosion occurred just as the factory operatives were assembling for their day's work.

ANNEXATION EXPECTED.

Senators Postpone Action on the Isle of Pines Treaty.

Washington Dec. 8. — The annexation of Cuba to the United States seems to be regarded by Republican leaders in the senate as only a question of time. Many believe that this step will be taken within a year. So general is the impression that annexation is inevitable that a decision was reached by the committee on foreign relations not to take up the sovereignty treaty dealing with the question of sovereignty over the Isle of Pines at this session of congress.

NEWS OF THE Northwest.

JUDGE WEBBER HANGS HIMSELF

HIS BODY FOUND HANGING FROM A RAFTER IN HAYLOFT OF HIS BARN.

BROODED OVER WIFE'S ILLNESS

New Ulm, Minn., Dec. 6.—Judge B. F. Webber committed suicide here yesterday morning by hanging himself to a rafter in the hayloft of his barn. He was discovered by Chief Adolph Klause shortly after 9 o'clock.

The rash act of this brilliant man was caused by despondency, brooding over the serious illness of his wife, who has been in a paralytic state for the last four months, and the fear that he would land in the poorhouse on account of the attending expenses, and the further fact that he resigned his office as judge last month and thereby was deprived of drawing his salary as judge.

Often Spoke of Suicide.

He had on several occasions intimated that he intended committing suicide, but was discouraged and told to look at the bright side of life. Instead he kept on brooding over his misfortune, and the expense of the household seemed to worry him considerably. There was no cause at any time of being financially embarrassed, as the judge was considered worth all the way from $75,000 to $100,000, at a very conservative estimate.

JUDGE B. F. WEBBER.

Judge Webber was a native of Maine, and came to Minnesota nearly forty years ago. He was seventy-four years old.

Twenty-four Years a Judge.

On Jan. 1, 1883, he assumed his duties as judge of the Ninth judicial district, having been elected to succeed Judge H. D. Baldwin, and served continuously for nearly twenty-four years, resigning shortly after the recent election, when Judge-elect I. M. Olson was named by Gov. Johnson to fill out the remainder of the erm.

MINNESOTA AGAIN AT TOP

FARM SCHOOL EXHIBITS WIN PRIZES IN LIVE STOCK SHOW AT CHICAGO.

St. Paul, Dec. 5. — Minnesota is again the winner of the big end of the prizes at the International Live Stock exposition at Chicago. A telegram received yesterday by Prof. J. M. Drew of the state farm school indicates that the herd exhibited by the school this year has won the championship in several classes, probably in more classes than the cattle from any other state, and that Minnesota has a good chance for the grand championship which will be decided to-day.

Prizes are awarded for the best animal of each age and the best animal of each breed. Then the winners in each breed are judged and the grand championship is awarded to the highest scoring of the lot. Clear Lake Jute won this championship for Minnesota two years ago.

FIVE TELL ABOUT RATES.

Progress Made in the Commodity Rate Hearing.

St. Paul, Dec. 5. — Much progress was made in the commodity rate hearing before the railroad and warehouse commission yesterday, when five witnesses were examined by Assistant Attorney General R. A. Stone.

The testimony yesterday attempted to show that commodity rates in Minnesota compare favorably with those in other states and are lower than in some places. When the traffic of certain commodities has increased in Minnesota so as to warrant reductions it was pointed out, such reductions have been made, as in the coal and grain reductions made recently. It was shown that there are some commodities which do not increase the revenue of the roads and more reductions would not be feasible.

The State DAY BY DAY

STATE FAIR A MONEY MAKER.

Receipts for Year Exceeded Quarter Million.

Minnesota's unsurpassed 1906 fair was the biggest money making fair ever held in the state, the total receipts during the six days, including the cash balance of the previous fair, amounting to $283,529.86, or $47,254.98 for each day. The orders paid out, not including the November bills, totaled $215,435.40, leaving a total balance on hand of $68,094.46.

These figures, as presented in the treasurer's report, while showing the money-making value of the fair, are not quite correct, as the November bills and a considerable amount still to be collected have not been included in the figures. Of the $68,094.46 balance, $57,000 has been deposited at interest at 3 per cent, the remaining $11,094.46 remaining in the treasury. The increase this year in the total clearings of the fair over that of last year is something like $18,000. The sale of tickets alone netted $152,511.72, over half of the total receipts.

This evidence of the growing popularity of Minnesota's state fair, which is the greatest fair held in any state in the Union, was brought out at the meeting of the fair board of managers at the Merchants hotel in St. Paul. All the members were present.

It was decided to hold the annual meeting in Minneapolis Jan. 8, 9 and 10, with a general program of educational value Tuesday and Wednesday. Thursday, the closing day, will be taken up with the business sessions. Gov. Johnson has promised to deliver the opening address Tuesday morning, and the afternoon will be devoted to talks on tile drainage, improved care of live stock and other topics. The evening program will be under the charge of the state dairy and food department. Wednesday morning the Minnesota Plant Breeders' association, of which Prof. Andrew Boss is secretary, will present papers on the care and raising of live stock. Thursday will be devoted to the reading of reports and the election of officers. The following week a meeting of the board will be held and plans for the 1907 fair started in earnest.

The board decided to send a delegation to Chicago to attend the international live stock show next week and also to attend the national meeting of fair managers, where the fair circuits will be made. In addition the delegates also will attend the annual meeting of the American Shorthorn Breeders' association, the annual meeting of the Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' association and the biennial congress of the American Trotting association. All these meetings have been drawn to Chicago next week, owing to the international live stock show, which is one of the most important events of the year.

The rest of the evening was devoted to a general discussion of next year's improvements and alterations, but nothing of a definite nature was decided, with one exception. The board unanimously agreed to ask the legislature to purchase the eighty-acre tract adjoining the fair grounds on the north. Owing to the fact that a committee was appointed by the last legislature to report to the 1907 session the advisibility of holding a state semi-centennial expostion in 1908 on the fair grounds, the board is obliged to await the report of the committee, and subsequent action of the legislature before making further plans.

It is believed that the state semi-centennial committee will advocate holding the exposition on the fair grounds, and if this is the case the purchase of the eighty-acre tract and the erection of at least one new building, in addition to the installation of a sewer system, will be absolutely necessary. But even though the exposition is not held on the fair grounds in 1908, the additional eighty acres of ground should be purchased, as the last fair machinery was crowded close to the north fence, and the threshing engines were sadly pressed for room in which to maneuver.

STATE BANKS PROSPER.

Minnesota's state banks show an unusually prosperous condition for the year in a statement just made to Public Examiner Kerst. The figures given are in answer to the usual call which was sent out Nov. 12.

The deposits have increased approximately from $50,000,000 for 1904 to double that amount for 1906. The immediate liabilities figure up nearly $40,000,000

For 1906 the resources were $85,029,499.87, for 1905 $72,709,311, and for 1904 $62,118,318. This is a net increase of over $22,000,000 for the two years. When this statement was made the state had 450 banks under the jurisdiction of the public examiner's office. Last year the number was only 407 and two years ago 348. This shows the growth of the state's banks.

WHITE PLAGUE DATA.

Board of Health Is Preparing It for National Meeting in Minneapolis.

The state board of health is preparing a state exhibit of tuberculosis. Charts and all kinds of data bearing on the subject of tuberculosis are being gathered by the department. The Western congress of tuberculosis will hold its meeting in Minneapolis in February, and it is the intention to have a large exhibit on tuberculosis. It will form a part of the exhibit of the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, which will be sent to the Twin Cities.

It is the intention to have an exhibition in both Minneapolis and St. Paul. The exhibit of the national association will be sent to St. Paul from San Antonio, Tex. While the exhibition is on display in St. Paul there will be lectures on the prevention care and other subjects of interest in connection with tuberculosis.

One chart which is being prepared shows the deaths from tuberculosis in Minnesota from 1888 to 1905, figured on a basis of 100,000 population. The state, country and cities are treated separately.

It is hoped that the exhibition and the lectures will do much to educate the people of the state in this matter. The national exhibit is the most complete of its kind in the country and takes up all phases of the disease.

MINNEOPA NOW A PARK.

Thirty Acres Surrounding Minneopa Falls Secured by the State.

Minneopa Park is now a reality. It entered in the list of state parks recently, when Attorney General Young, with the approval of Gov. Johnson, closed the deal for the purchase of thirty acres surrounding the Minneopa Falls, which are five miles south of Mankato.

The last legislature appropriated $5,000 for the purchase of such land as would be necessary for the establishment of such a park. The thirty acres were purchased for $3,500. It is expected that the legislature will provide additional funds this winter to improve the park and make it one of the beauty spots of the state.

The park will be under the jurisdiction of the state auditor and by legislative act is dedicated to the perpetual use of the people of Minnesota. The ground about the falls is densely wooded and picturesque. Minneopa Falls has long been a resort for the residents of Blue Earth county. The drive to the falls from Mankato is beautiful, through a rich country.

Minneopa Falls is rich in Indian lore. Names of chiefs and Indian powwows of all kinds ares associated with the locality.

VOTE IS NIP AND TUCK.

Road Tax Amendment to Constitution May Be Lost.

Returns that have come to the secretary of state's office during the past week do not change the result on the constitutional amendments. The returns have been slow in coming in, and only four counties reported during the week. These four gave a slight majority for the road tax amendment, but not enough to overcome what was lacking in the other counties. A total of seventy-one counties, including Ramsey and Hennepin, gave the amendment a total of 120,014 votes out of a total of 240,936. The amendment would require 455 more votes to have a majority in these counties.

The same counties give the wide-open tax amendment 131,954. The counties that have not yet reported are Aitkin, Big Stone, Blue Earth, Carlton, Cottonwood, Hubbard, Itasca, Marshall, Morrison, Pine, Rice and St. Louis. Some of these have sent their first returns, but these cannot be opened until the duplicate returns are received or the state canvassing board meets, Dec. 18.

O'BRIEN WILL REMAIN.

Insurance Commissioner Not to Leave Gov. Johnson's Cabinet.

Insurance Commissioner Thomas D. O'Brien is not to leave Gov. Johnson's cabinet. The governor has announced that he had offered a reappointment to Mr. O'Brien, and that the latter had "consented to stay in the office two years more."

There has been continual talk of the withdrawal of Mr. O'Brien, as his law practice in St. Paul is more valuable than his berth as commissioner of insurance. He has been the strong man of the Johnson administration, and his consent to reappointment is received with considerable satisfaction.

DRAINAGE CONVENTION.

It Will Be Held in Fargo Dec. 11 and 12—300 Delegates to Attend.

Arrangements are being made for the drainage convention which will be held in Fargo Dec. 11 and 12. Mayor Johnson Monday began arranging for a hall in which the convention will be held. It is expected that over 300 delegates will attend the meeting from different parts of the state.

One of the features promised at the convention will be the speakers. Mayor Johnson and Senator J. L. Cashel have both written J. J. Hill to come to Fargo and address the convention. Invitations are also being extended to other prominent speakers. The date of holding the convention was fixed by President Cashel as Dec. 11 and 12. In a letter to Mayor Johnson, which President Cashel suggested the number of representatives to be allowed to attend the convention from the various towns and counties

With the advent of real winter, a foot of snow and zero temperature hundreds of farmers around Fergus Falls have given up all hope of getting their threshing done this year, and the delay is going to mean a heavy loss as spring threshing is anything but satisfactory and not always possible.

TEN YEARS OF PAIN.

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton street, Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney troubles. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp shooting pains. My eyesight was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

BOY'S HEAD WAS SOLID SORE.

Hair All Came Out — Under Doctor Three Months and No Better—Cuticura Works Wonders.

Mr. A. C. Barnett, proprietor of a general store in Avard, Oklahoma, tells in the following grateful letter how Cuticura cured his son of a terrible eczema. "My little bay had eczema. His head was one solid sore, all over his scalp; his hair all came out, and he suffered very much. I had a physician treat him, but at the end of three months he was no better. I remembered that the Cuticura Remedies had cured me, and after giving him two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, according to directions, and using Cuticura Soap and Ointment on him daily, his eczema left him, his hair grew again, and he has never had any eczema since. We use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they keep our skin soft and healthy. I cheerfully recommend the Cuticura Remedies for all cases of eczema. A. C. Barnett, Mar. 30. 1905."

THOSE ELEVEN LOST DAYS.

The eleven days from Sept. 3 to 13, inclusive, are memorable for having once been entirely omitted from the Anglo-Saxon world

The Gregorian calendar was not adopted by the British empire until 1751, long after most other nations of the civilized world had conformed to it. In that year an act of parliament prescribed that the next year, 1752, should begin on Jan. 1 instead of on March 25, as had previously been the rule, and that in the following September these eleven days should be dropped from the calendar, the day following Sept. 2 being known as Sept. 14. Stirring times those were, too, in which days were not lightly spared from a year, with Clive conquering India and Washington beginning the conquest of the Ohio valley.

But the procession of the equinoxes took no note of trifles like these, which could be accomplished as well under one calendarial style as another. It may be observed that while Gregory dropped only ten days from 1582 eleven days had to go from 1752 and Russia would have to drop thirteen from 1906 to square her dates with the rest of the world.—New York Tribune.

NEW YEAR'S CALLS.

A New Drink to Replace the Old-Time "Apple-Jack."

Twenty-five years ago the custom of making New Year's calls was a delightful one for all concerned, until some of the boys got more "egg-nog" or "apple-jack" than they could successfully carry.

Then the ladies tried to be charitable and the gentlemen tried to be as chivalrous as ever and stand up at the same time.

If anyone thinks there has not been considerable improvement made in the last quarter of a century in the use of alcoholic beverages, let him stop to consider, among other things, the fact that the old custom of New Year's calls and the genteel tippling is nearly obsolete.

The custom of calling on one's friends, however, at the beginning of the new year, is a good habit, and another good habit to start at that time is the use of well-made Postum instead of coffee or spirits.

A Staten Island doctor has a sensible daughter who has set Postum before her guests as a good thing to drink at Yule Tide, and a good way to begin the New Year. Her father writes:

"My daughter and I have used Postum for some time past, and we feel sure it contains wholesome food material.

"I shall not only recommend it to my patients, but my daughter will be most pleased to give a demonstration of Postum to our Christmas and New Year's callers." Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a reason."

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Minnesota is growing old. But few of the moulders of the destinies of the territorial government are alive, and those few permitted to be with us are for the most part too old to longer bear the burdens of public affairs. But the other day a scene was enacted in the supreme court of the state calculated to bring to the newer generation a lively reminder of the early days of the commonwealth. It was the memorial to Lafayette Emmett—what a combination of heroic names!—first chief justice of the territory of Minnesota. Mr. Emmett was a native of Ohio, where he had achieved more than local renown as a lawyer and statesman, and was named as chief justice of newly established territory on May 24, 1858, by President Pierce, serving in that capacity until 1865. Previously he had served four years as attorney general.

Not long after the expiration of his term of office Judge Emmett left Minnesota, and few of the newer residents of the state knew of him until the report of his death in faraway Arizona was published last August. At the memorial exercises in the supreme court chamber the other day were Judge Thomas Wilson, an associate with Mr. Emmett on the bench; Hon. Harvey Officer, reporter of the supreme court at that time, and the veteran William Pitt Murray, one of the early lawyers of the territory.

Thus the past and present are spanned by a single life! What a privilege for those patriotic old pioneers to see the state they founded grow from such humble beginnings to one of the choicest pearls in the nation's domain.

The Crookston Times notes that the price of lumber is about the only thing keeping pace with Johnson's majority,

It took two and one-half hours to read the president's message to Congress. How many congressmen took the same amount of time to think it over?

Can't that currency bill which is supposed to provide money for bankers in time of great need, be stretched to include the rest of us? Bankers are not the only people who want money in the worst way in time of need.

Cheek breaks in where angels fear to tread. A. G. Bernard, deposed as president of the Minnesota Drainage league for good and official reasons, goes down to Oklahoma and gets himself elected vice-president of the National Drainage association. The race is not always, but too often, to the swift.

A thing that the real estate purchaser should consider in his purchasing is the tendency of the average man to believe that the day for profitable investment has gone by. Prices today naturally seem high when one recalls how cheaply the same property sold a generation ago. How often one hears: "If my father had bought that property thirty years ago he'd be a rich man today." And how seldom the man who makes this statement reflects that thirty years from now his son will be saying the same thing of him.

WHY IS IT THUS?

There are twenty-four farmers in the present Congress, out out of a total membership of 476. The two farmers in the Senate are both from South Carolina. There are two farmers in the house from South Carolina. New York has two farmers in the House—Mr. Cocks of Suffolk, and Mr. Wadsworth, of Geneseo. The rest of the farmer members are scattered around the country, no two being from the same state. Will somebody please explain why it is that the farmers of the United States, with the votes to elect members of congress in proportion to their numbers—that is nearly one-half—permit lawyers, manufacturers and bankers to so rule the roost, as is indicated by the above figures!

Harsh Criticism.

Ripley Hitchcock, the noted critic of New York, was talking at the Century club about harsh criticisms.

"As harsh criticism as I know of," he said, "was compactly and neatly uttered by a bishop last spring.

"A minister wrote a commentary on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and sent it to the bishop, along with a note asking for a few critical words.

"The bishop sent the book back, after he had read it, with this judgment:

"'There is but one thing that I regret about this work—namely, that Jeremiah is not living now to compose a fresh book of lamentations on your commentary.'"

"The last syllable," the inspector answered, "is always silent."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Keep in Good Health.

There are many thousands of people all over the world who can attribute their good health to taking one or two Brandreth's Pills every night. These pills cleanse the stomach and bowels, stimulate the kidneys and liver and purify the blood. They are the same fine laxative tonic pills your grandparents used, and being purely vegetable they are adapted to children and old people, as well as those in the vigor of manhood and womanhood.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

"I understand your wife lectured you for an hour last night."

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton. "She told me about a few of my faults."

"Didn't it annoy you?"

Wealth of German Empress.

The German empress, in addition to jewels worth $500,000 that are her own private property, has the right to use the splendid collection of gems that belong to the Prussian treasury. The empress is thus able sometimes to appear at court wearing jewels roughly valued at $1,250,000.

LIKE A FAIRY TALE.

The Story of Postum Cereal in Words and Pictures.

The growth of the Postum Cereal Co. is like a fairy tale, but it is true every word of it.

"The Door Unbolted" is the title of a charming little booklet just issued by the Company which tells, and illustrates, the story of this remarkable growth. It takes the reader from the little white barn in which the business was started Jan. 1, 1895, through the palatial offices and great factory buildings of the "White City" that comprise Postumville, Battle Creek, Mich.

The little white barn, so carefully preserved, is a most interesting building, for it represents the humble beginning of one of the country's greatest manufacturing enterprises of to-day, an enterprise that has grown from this little barn to a whole city of factory buildings within but little more than ten years.

No less interesting is the quaint official home of the Postum Cereal Co. The general office building of Mr. Post and his associates is a reproduction of the Shakespeare house at Stratford-on-Avon, and upon the house and its furnishings has been expended vast sums of money, until the rooms are more like the drawing rooms of the mansions of our multi-millionaires than like offices.

That Mr. Post has believed thoroughly in the idea of giving to his employes attractive and healthful work rooms is proven not only by the general office building of the Company and its furnishings, but by his factories as well, and of all of these things this beautiful little booklet tells the interesting story. It will be sent to anyone on request.

CHAPTER XXII—(Continued.)

"Now, I am in need of a friend just now."

"Exactly."

"And I think I have found him."

"Here?" asked Lepelletier, touching himself lightly on the chest.

"Justement!" said Ribot.

"Well, as you have said already, let us come to our business. What do you ask for?"

"A partnership. And a little knowledge of a few facts which are in your possession. When those facts are at my disposal it may be easy for me and agreeable to you to dissolve the partnership. I could do quite well without you, and I would sooner live in Paris than in London. But, mind you, I must live until I can verify the facts as to which I shall rely upon your kindness to supply me."

"And if I surrender those facts you promise to let me go?"

"You must find the sinews of war until they are verified."

"Understood!" said Lepelletier. "What do you want to know?"

"I want to know to whom you disposed of the Bercy jewels. They were valued at half a million francs. You yourself had lost nearly half that sum at Monte Carlo before you were arrested. Now, you see, I naturally argue the purchaser to be wealthy; very possibly well respected."

"You are welcome to the name. Do you know Wolff, of the Rue de la Paix?"

"Oho!" said Ribot: "Wolff?" He whistled and sat thoughtful. "Have you touched him?"

"No, he played fairly with me, and I observe the code of the trade."

"Thieves' honor, eh?" said Ribot.

"Precisely," said the other. "See you. I give you his name under force majeure. You can send me to be shaved by the national barber, and can have my head made into a sawdust pie. To preserve oneself is nature's first law."

"Comme!" cried Ribot, with a laugh. "As these English say, 'Each for himself and the foul fiend take the hindmost.' Sauve qui peut!"

"You will need proof. If I give it, I am free?"

"Of my claim? Absolutely. It will be better to go into partnership with Wolff than with M. Dubois."

Lepelletier took pen, ink and paper and wrote. The detective sat and watched him with a cheerful nonchalance.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"You don't seem to have been long in getting out of your grime, governor," said the sergeant, when Ribot returned after his interview with Lepelletier. M. Ribot found it necessary to have this phrase translated for him, but when he understood it he laughed with a quiet enjoyment.

"No," he said; "I fancied I might have to lay a regular siege to him, but I took him off his guard and he capitulated at once."

"I don't quite understand," Holt said, probing at his pipe, and looking up at Ribot from under his eyebrows. "Are you after the man you spoke about this morning, the fellow who escaped from Cayenne and who killed his double-ganger?"

"Yes," said Ribot; "that is the man."

"Well," Holt asked, "what in the name of goodness do you want to finesse with him for? It's a case of prison-fracture and murder. Why didn't you lay hands on him at once?"

"Ah!" Ribot answered, with a cunning look, laying a finger on his nose. "It is not yet time. You remember the theft of the Bercy diamonds?"

"Bercy diamonds?" said Holt, reflectively, "Bercy diamons? Paris case, wasn't it? Wasn't there a butler or a concierge or somebody or other stabbed in the scrimmage? It was a man named Leroux who was found guilty, wasn't it?"

"He called himself Leroux," said Ribot. "His real name is Lepelletier."

"Well, you've tried him and convicted him, and since then he's broken prison and committed murder. What's to hinder you from giving him in charge and claiming extradition?"

"Ah!" said Ribot again, and once more he laid a forefinger at the side of his nose. "There was a famous countryman of yours who said, 'They do these things better in France.'" He drew near to his companion and tapped him on the breast. "We never succeeded in tracing the diamonds. They are valued at five hundred thousand francs, twenty thousand English sterling pounds, my friend."

"Yes," Holt answered, with a queer look at him, in which a trace of bewilderment seemed mingled with displeasure and surprise. "I remember that."

"I've got out of him the name of the receiver and the proofs which are necessary to convict."

"That's all right," said the sergeant. "But you don't propose to let him go for that, do you?"

"To let him go?" echoed Ribot, with a smile; "why hardly."

"Then what induced him to give his pal away?"

"What induced him to betray his accomplice? His fear, my friend! His fear!"

"Yes, yes, yes," said Holt, impatiently. "But didn't you give him some hope or understanding in return?"

"I did," said Ribot. Holt's face darkened and hardened curiously. "I had a hold on him in another direction. I promised him that I would not interfere with him there. Do you perceive?"

"Yes," Holt turned away and charged his pipe with great deliberation; "you left him under the impression that you wouldn't meddle with him—that he was to get off scot-free so far as you were concerned?"

"Certainly, most certainly, that is the construction he will put upon it. But I made him no promise apart from the other affair. He is blackmailing somebody, and I undertook not to interfere with him in respect to that particular enterprise."

"But you're going to interfere with him in respect to that particular enterprise? You're going to send him to the guillotine?"

"Assuredly," said Ribot.

"Then I'm hanged if they do these things better in France," cried Holt, puffing fiercely at his newly-lighted pipe, and facing round on his companion. "Send the poor wrech to the guillotine by all means. He deserves it, but he doesn't deserve to be betrayed and trapped in that way. No, no. We've got to use guile for guile, and strategem for strategem; but when it comes to making understandings that are meant to be broken, and promises that are just so many barefaced lies—if that's the French method, well and good. I can only say it ain't the British."

"Monsieur," said Ribot, speaking with a frozen dignity, and reverting to his own language, "I am perfectly willing to leave my professional reputation in the hands of my official superiors."

"Quite so," Holt answered, "but I can tell you this, there isn't a judge on the British bench who wouldn't make a British officer wish himself dead and buried if a thing like that were proved against him. If your authorities think well of it, why that puts you right. You're acting up to the principles of your profession as they're understood in your own country. But you won't find anybody on this side of the channel to think they do things better in France. No; fair's fair. I'll gammon my man with anything short of false promises, but there I draw the line."

"I am not Quixote, I!" said M. Ribot. "I am, all simply, a poor officer in the secret service of the police of the French republic. I am paid to detect crime, and I do not count it unfair to use false coin in dealing with a fraudulent coiner."

The two old friends and colleagues parted in some heat on either side and they were cool for a day or so. But Ribot had work and interests of his own, and he found himself moving so prosperously that he forgot his pique. He had forwarded to headquarters the evidence with which Lepelletier had supplied him, and one fair morning Paris was supplied with a sensation in the news that one of its wealthiest and most respected tradesmen had been arrested on a charge of having instigated the theft of the Bercy diamonds; and at the hour at which the arrest took place the English police laid hands on the most desperate French criminal of his day in the person of Victor Lepelletier, alias Leroux. It was Ribot who appeared to demand his extradition, and the criminal behaved like a madman in the dock. He yelled curses at his accuser, and but for the intervention of half a dozen stalwart men of the Metropolitan police he would have leapt the rail and would have torn the detective piecemeal with his hands. It took the half-dozen all their time to hold him, for he fought with a demoniac force and fury, using nails and teeth and feet, snarling and howling beastlinke, until he failed from sheer exhaustion, and had not even strength to leave the dock without the violent assistance his guardians gave him.

It so chanced that the Daily Record had a special man in court that day, engaged upon the descriptive report of another case. It came natural to him to make much of this unexpected scene, which to a working journalist was quite a "scoop" in its way. His work came out under half-a-dozen flaring headlines on one of the central pages of the paper, and amongst scores of others Alexis Brangwyn read it at his breakfast table. It brought him a mingled fear and hope. There was just a possibility that a wretch so desperate might feel a malicious satisfaction in involving others in his own ruin, and might make so clean a breast of it as to expose everybody to whom he could impute a crime or even an embarrassing wrong doing. On the other side it might be that he—the last of the dragon's tooth crop—was extirpated, and that henceforth Alexis might be left to such poor peace as could henceforth be his. He waited in great anxiety, and read every line he could find alike in the Paris and the London press with regard to the trial of Lepelletier.

He might have thought that less depended upon it than he had supposed had he heard the farewells of Sergeant Holt and M. Ribot. The temporary cloud between these two had evaporated and they were on the old terms together. The scene was Charing Cross railway station, where Holt had gone to shake his colleague for the last time by the hand. Lepelletier was already seated with a brace of warders to look after him in a reserved third-class compartment, and Ribot was in readiness to enter his own carriage when a memory suddenly occurred to him.

"By the way," he said, "I forgot it in the pressure of affairs; but my bird down yonder"—nodding his head in the direction of the compartment in which the prisoner was confined—"seems to have had some connection with a case in which you were concerned."

"Indeed?" said Holt.

"I had him shadowed whilst I left him at liberty, and I knew, of course, that he was living on the proceeds of blackmail. Who it was that he had under his thumb I did not guess. It was obviously some one who was well-to-do, for he seemed to have little difficulty in obtaining money. He made two visits whilst under surveillance, and he came back from each of them with a fair supply."

"Who was the victim?" Holt asked. "Had I ever anything to do with him?"

"You had, indeed," said Ribot. At this instant the clear call of the guard's whistle sounded. The Frenchman stepped into his carriage, dropped the window, closed the door, and leaned forward with a beckoning forefinger. Holt drew near. "The name was——" A shriek from the engine cut off the word. The wheels began to move, and Holt walked beside the window.

"What was the name?" he asked.

"Brangwyn," said Ribot. "That may be a clue for you. Au revoir."

The train rolled on, and Holt stood there pondering. Brangwyn again! He had known from the first that he had been set on the right track, and with this new impetus he experienced a new impulse to probe this old puzzle to its center. He walked slowly and thoughtfully toward New Scotland Yard. There he found his immediate chief in charge, the man from whom he had taken his instructions in the Brangwyn case since first it fell into his hands. He laid the new facts before him.

"Seems to me, sir," he concluded, "the man's got something to hide. We made a pretty good inquiry into his antecedents months ago, and outside the one thing we usspected we found his record clear."

"Yes," said the chief, "I have the case in detail. It is not strong enough to act on a man in his position. But this new clew must be followed. You will get your remand on Monday, and you will have a week in hand. Follow Ribot to Paris on the evening of Monday next. Learn everything that he can tell you, and report on return. It's an interesting case, sergeant."

"Interesting, sir!" said Holt. "I'd give a little finger to be at the bottom of it."

"It has waited so long that it may wait a little longer," his chief answered. "Paris, Monday. Good night."

"Good-night, sir."

At the Hotel Continental on the Tuesday morning Sergeant Holt encountered an old acquaintance. It was Billery, but such a different Billery to the Billery he had known that at first glance he was not sure of him. Billery with a lady on his arm—a lady so evidently in the first blush of wifehood that there was no mistaking her. Billery so refurbished, so resplendent, so clear of complexion, so bright of eye, so impaccable in aspect and attire that even at a second glance the sergeant doubted. But just then their eyes met, and Billery's instant flash of recognition settled the question. He spoke to the lady, who smiled and spoke in answer, and the two crossed the courtyard.

"My dear," said Billery, "allow me to introduce you to Mr. Holt. My wife, Mr. Holt."

(To Be Continued.)

NEW YORKERS READ LITTLE.

They Have No Homes, Only Places to Eat and Sleep.

New York reads less than any other part of the country. The reason is that there are no homes in New York—no home life. The eagles and the buzzards there live in aeries, and the rats and mice live in holes in the ground. That is to say, they seleep in these places and because these are the only sleeping places they have they go to bed as late as possible.

Therefore, they have neither time nor place for reading. They scan the headlines of the big morning and afternoon papers and this satisfies their appetite for reading. It is this that accounts for the atrocious system of headlining in the New York papers that make money. If New York city were a city of yards, like Philadelphia or Washington, its consumption of literature would be immense, because of its huge population. But the people have no homes—only places to sleep—hence they have no opportunity to read. They are forced to live in the streets, in the cages, in the theaters, on street cars, river boats, etc., and this manner of living is not conducive to the reading habit.

Why, if the proportion of readers in New York were as great as it is in Philadelphia, for example, it would be the greatest literary market in the world. The building regulations of Philadelphia wisely compel provision for yard space around living places, either front or back or side, and this affords the people of that city an opportunity to build homes, where they go because it is comfortable and where they read because they are quiet.

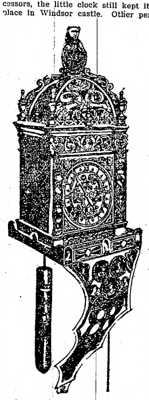
ROYAL LOVER'S GIFT

ANNE BOLEYN'S CLOCK PRESERVED AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

Just as It was When, Three Centuries Ago, the Fickle Monarch Gave It to the Captivator of His Fancy.

In the private apartments at Windsor castle may be seen, standing on a marble pedestal the clock that Henry VIII. gave to the ill-fated Anne Boleyn on the occasion of their marriage—the bridegroom's gift to the bride. To-day the little clock looks in no way remarkable and would be passed unnoticed by anyone not knowing its history, for few would imagine that it was the treasured wedding present of a queen; but at the time it was given, before a third of the sixteenth century had run its course, it was a gift to be envied, for watches and clocks were seldom ever seen in the palaces of kings; and such a beauty as this, decorated with gold, and of wonderful mechanism, was indeed a rarity.

We can therefore easily imagine the store that in those early days of regal love and splendor Anne Boleyn set upon this clock, and how carefully she kept it. The value and beauty of it are perhaps best understood when one recollects that, even after the downfall of its owner and the subsequent rise of her several successors, the little clock still kept its place in Windsor castle. Other personal gifts and treasures came and went, but this survived until at last it has passed into the hands of the above any other timepiece in her possession, although she is the happy owner of some of the most unique specimens of clocks and watches in the world.



Queen Anne Boleyn's Clock.

The clock still keeps perfect time, and, as Harrison Ainsworth said of it: "This love-token of enduring affection remains the same after three centuries after it was given the object of Henry's eternal love was sacrificed on the scaffold. The clock still goes! It should have stopped forever when Anne Boleyn died."

EMETIC SAVES A HOTEL.

Causes Bulldog to "Cough Up" Missing Diamond Ring.

While Mrs. George L. Hemingway, a well-known society woman of Waterbury, Conn., who is a guest at the Granite Bay hotel, Short Beach, was playing with her thoroughbred bulldog she lost a solitaire diamond ring valued at $200. A search of the premises failing to reveal the missing gem John Speh, the hotel proprietor, declared that the dog had swallowed it. Mrs. Hemingway laughed at the idea, but Speh pleaded that the dog might be killed, offering to pay a round sum for the animal rather than have his caravansary rest under suspicion. Mrs. Hemingway refused.

"Well, then," said Speh, "make the pup cough up." And he sent for a physician.

When the doctor arrived he found Speh standing guard over the dog, which was promptly given an emetic. The result was all that could be desired, and the missing ring was recovered.

Witchcraft Still Believed in.

Having lost a large number of cattle during the last year, and believing a neighbor, thought by some of the superstitious to be a witch, was causing him bad luck, Joseph Gottshalk, a prosperous Mahanoy Valley, Pa., farmer, recently signed a contract with a woman to give him protection for one year. The woman is alleged to possess the power of witchcraft. Gottshalk will pay her a regular salary for her protection. In 12 months he has lost, through sickness and accident, many cows, horses and pigs, although his barn was a model of sanitation. Since Gottshalk first called in his woman protector the illness in his stock has ceased.

Persistent Anæmia Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills After Other Remedies Had Failed.

"When I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," says Mrs. Nathaniel Field, of St. Albans, Somerset county, Maine, "I was the palest, most bloodless person you could imagine. My tongue and gums were colorless and my fingers and ears were like wax. I had two doctors and they pronounced my trouble anæmia. I had spells of vomiting, could not eat, in fact, did not dare to, I had such distress after eating. My stomach was filled with gas which caused me awful agony. The backache I suffered was at times almost unbearable and the least exertion made my heart beat so fast that I could hardly breathe. But the worst of all was the splitting neuralgia headache which never left me for seven weeks. About this time I had had several numb spells. My limbs would be cold and without any feeling and the most deathly sensations would come over me.

"Nothing had helped me until I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, in fact, I had grown worse every day. After I had taken the pills a short time I could see that they were benefiting me and one morning I awoke entirely free from pain. The distress after eating disappeared and in three weeks I could eat anything I wanted and suffer no inconvenience. I also slept soundly. I have taken several boxes of the pills and have gained in weight from 120 to 154 pounds and am perfectly well now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure anæmia because they actually make new blood. For rheumatism, indigestion, nervous headaches and many forms of weakness they are recommended even if ordinary medicines have failed. They are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

THE CANADIAN WEST IS THE BEST WEST

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The testimony of thousands during the past year is that the Canadian West is the best West. Year by year the agricultural returns have increased in volume and in value, and still the Canadian Government offers 160 acres FREE to every bona fide settler.

Some of the Advantages

The phenomenal increase in railway mileage—main lines and branches—has put almost every portion of the country within easy reach of churches, schools, markets, cheap fuel and every modern convenience.

The NINETY MILLION BUSHEL WHEAT CROP of this year means $60,000,000 to the farmers of Western Canada, apart from the results of other grains and cattle.

For advice and information address the SUPERINTENDENT OF IMMIGRATION, Ottawa, Canada, or any authorized Government Agent.

Kitty's Cousin

By Paul Creswick

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Oh, there you are, Reggie! How do you do? I'm so glad to see you again." Kitty beamed delightfully upon me. "I hear you have quite settled Mr. Rollison's affair—so clever of you."

"I had very little—"

"What a bother it has been, hasn't it? But I can't have my best young man doing nothing," continued my charming hostess. "Now there's such a dear little thing over there, by the window. Come along at once—I have a thousand people to arrange yet. And some of them are so uneven."

"Why don't you say 'odd,' and be done with it? What does the dear little thing do; and shall I have to make love to her?"

"Don't argue—I haven't a minute to lose. Here come the Ponsonbys, with an artist man whose name I have entirely forgotten. Be quick!"

"I must know whether she paints, or writes, or sculpts—"

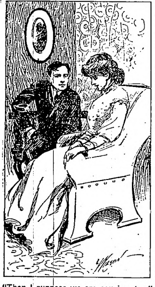
"She doesn't do anything now, beyond being very good and sweet—and she's all alone."

Kitty, without permitting me another word, steered us both marvelously across the wide studio. Then I heard her usual introduction—quite unintelligible, until my own name was reached. "—My Reggie—he has been begging for an introduction! Do be kind to him, and excuse my rushing away at once. I see a heap more arrivals."

I turned dutifully towards the "dear little thing." I instantly rather liked her; and had a vague feeling that we had met before. I began carefully, "I have been hearing how frightfully good you are—"

"But I'm not frightfully good," she interrupted, gently—stirring familiar chords chaotically within me.

"Honor bright?" I questioned.



"Then I suppose we are cousins, too."

She nodded. "I'm only a country cousin of Mrs. Frazer's. She's awfully kind. Introduces me to everyone. Now, of course, you're a somebody? Artist, author, or—"

"Philosopher," said I, taking a surreptitious peep at her. Surely that straight defiant little nose, that slightly self-conscious trick of flushing—But she was expecting a full definition of myself—"I'll tell you a secret—quite a true little secret. It's the easiest thing in the world to be a philosopher; and the best paying. You merely have to wear a high forehead, and look profound. Nature most obligingly has permitted me to achieve the former—I rather want her to stop just where she is; whilst I have acquired a sphinx-like look through attending cousin Kitty's tea-parties—"

"Cousin Kitty? Then I suppose we are cousins, too?"

"Indubitably. But I'm a town cousin, which only counts since she has been a widow—four, or is it five years? As regards philosophy, however—but do you like hearing me talk?"

"It's . . . heavenly," she breathed, with shy conviction.

"I was at that moment thinking where I had heard your name before. I mean the Muriel part of it." I explained, as I hadn't heard the other. "However, it has just come back to me—and thereby hangs a tale. It's a Muriel; and is quite respectable. You might be able to advise me about it—since it's a problem."

"To whom?"

"Myself indirectly; and a friend chiefly. He's a decent fellow. I met him at a dinner. In the course of his lunches he encountered a girl. She was cashier at the shop. The shop is a very nice luncheon place, and the people live over it. I have seen her. Well, my friend saw her—"

"Yes?" My partner was flushing again in her delicious way.

"Fell over head and ears in love. All the while I never guessed a word."

"How did you find out?"

"Just sheer braininess. I perceived that Wally was not well. He seemed altogether peculiar. Ethereal and poetic. He left off swearing when dinner was late—studied harder than ever. After a little inward cogitation, I drew him on one side. I said quietly but distinctly: 'My boy, it won't do. What is her name, and how did you discover that she was an angel?' Wally—his real name is Wallace Rollison, by the way—turned gray as the law courts themselves."

"What did he say?" asked Muriel, in a queer sort of voice.

"The whole miserable story burst forth, as from a volcano. I sat down heavily on the nearest seat—we were in Temple Gardens—and gasped. He clung to me, and instructed me that she was a dear. . . . They always are, you know. That her name was Muriel. . . . I'm sorry to drag you into it."

"Never mind that. Please go on I'm so anxious to hear the moral."

"Don't be impatient. I talked about his career; and about marrying in haste. I expounded that he hadn't known her long enough—"

"That she was primarily only a cashier; and that she had been in a shop?"

"No. Those facts were patent—and didn't so much matter. But he was infatuated."

"Well?"

"At my earnest request, he kept away from her for a week. I said that he would get her into a row, and make her lose her place. That, no doubt, she was poor—and had relatives. I was quite a father to him."

"Didn't it strike you that the girl might have had feelings?"

"Providence made me essentially normal. Everything I eat digests, you know. But pray hear the denouement. Wally came back at four o'clock. He had seen the girl and had asked her the great question. And she . . . had said NO."

I paused to give this effect. My companion was looking away. Her small hands were restless in her lap. She spoke to me presently, very soft and low. "Were you surprised!" she inquired, nervously.

"Very. But my respect for Miss Muriel went up at a bound. I began to be angry with Rollison. I told him he hadn't asked her properly. He protested miserably that he had implored . . . until she had told him that there was someone else."

"Someone else?"

"More in her own position, she had declared. And then had incontinently commenced to cry. Quietly and pathetically, Wally said. He couldn't understand anything but the NO. He came away."

"Was there anything else to understand?"

"Now you are touching the problem. Of course there wasn't 'someone else.' I saw through that, after ten minutes' hard thinking. The plucky little beggar had judged the case as I had. She really loved him, and so wouldn't let him take the risk."

"And possibly she thought that he would lose his friends, as well as his chance. That his mother would, perhaps—"

"How well you see it," I interrupted "His mother . . . you would never credit it; but she actually told Wally to try again! Said she was sure that no boy of hers would ever ask her to love a new daughter who wasn't worthy. I felt awfully mean and small—when I heard him answer that fair play was a jewel. That he wasn't going to ask the little girl to be disloyal."

"Why did you feel mean?"

"Because I only had to tell what I had guessed—which, mind you, I'm as certain of as I am of anything in life—and he would have gone back. And would have persuaded her, in time."

"In time?"

"Yes. I made a few inquiries, discreetly, myself. She had left the shop and had gone home; and, all the while, I knew in my heart that she would make him the best little wife in the world. She would have helped him. . . . Don't you think I'm a beast?"

"Perhaps you were wrong. About the guess, I mean. She might have had another lover—"

"She hadn't, absolutely."

"If they had married—would you, as one of his friends, have cared to still know him? They would have been poor, and through it all—the worry, I mean—he might have failed. Again, she mightn't have been his equal."

"I feel a culprit," I protested. "Whenever I see his face, it comes home to me. I ought to tell him—"

"Would you . . . be best man at his wedding?"

"The problem again! I have seen so many unhappy marriages; and yet—"

My companion turned towards me once more, and her gray eyes seemed to hold tears. It was full dusk in the room, the gabbling riot going on—pictures and shows, and mediums and manners—all were curiously remote. I felt myself strangely drawn towards the little girl. . . . She put out her hand as if to take something from mine. "Don't you feel that she was right?" she asked, gently and patiently. Then, altering her tone, she concluded abruptly, "I'll take your check, please."

I knew her, then. I knew that I had known her all along. Of course, of course! That true contralto voice; those unforgetable eyes. I answered her soberly. "We have both been wrong; but Wally was right. It is only love that matters, in this poor little world. . . . Let me get you some tea?"

On my way I almost ran into Kitty. "You have been good," she whispered, approvingly. "Do you see who is by the door? It's Mr. Rollison, looking everywhere for you."

"Not for me," I said, decidedly. "So you put it into my head, did you? It was very ingeniously suggested! I'm about to get Muriel some very nice tea—two cups—and then I'm going to let Rollison carry the tray."

Kitty squeezed my arm affectionately. "You're quite my best young man," she murmured. "I have great hopes of you, Reggie."

THE FARMER IN WESTERN CANADA.

The Quality of No. 1 Hard Wheat Cannot Be Beaten.

The Canadian West in the past five or ten years has given a set back to the theory that large cities are the backbone of a country and a nation's best asset. Here we have a country where no city exceeds 100,000, and where only one comes within easy distance of that figure according to the census just taken and where no other city reaches a population exceeding 15,000. The places with a population over 5,000 can be counted upon the fingers of one hand, and yet the prosperity that prevails is something unprecedented in the history of all countries past or present.

The reason for this marvelous prosperity is not hard to seek. The large majority of the 810,000 people who inhabit Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have gone on to the farm, and have betaken themselves to the task of not only feeding and clothing themselves, but of raising food for others less happily circumstanced.

The crop of 1906, although not abnormal, is an eye-opener to many who previously had given little thought to the subject. Ninety million bushels of wheat at 70 cents per bushel—$63,000,000; 76,000,000 bushels of oats at 30 cents per bushel—$22,800,000; 17,000,000 bushels of barley at 40 cents per bushel—$6,800,000; makes a total of $92,600,000. This is altogether outside the root products; dairy produce, and the returns from the cattle trade; the beet sugar industry and the various other by-products of mixed farming.

When such returns are obtainable from the soil it is not to be wondered at that many are leaving the congested districts of the eayst, to take upon themselves the life of the prairie farm and the labor of the housbandman.

With the construction of additional railroads new avenues, for agricultural enterprise are opening up, and improved opportunities are offered to the settler who understands prairie farming, and is willing to do his part in building up the new country.

This is the theme that Mr. J. J. Hill, the veteran railroad builder in the West, has laid before the people in a series of addresses which he has given at various points during the past few months, and, having been for so long identified with the development of the West, there are few men better qualified than he to express an opinion upon it. Take care of the country, says he, and the cities will take care of themselves.

The farmers of the Western States and the Canadian West, are more prosperous than ever before, and when it comes to measuring up results, the Canadian appears to have somewhat the better of it. His land is cheaper in fact, the government continues to give free homesteads to settlers, and the returns per acre are heavier when the crop is harvested. Farming land in the Western States runs from $60 to $150 an acre and up, whereas equally good soil may be purchased in Canada for $8 to $15 per acre, within easy reach of a shipping point, and much of this is available for free homesteading. The quality of the Canadian No. 1 hard wheat cannot be beaten, and the returns to the acre are several bushels better than on this side of the line; the soil and climate of that country being peculiarly adapted to wheat growing.

The fact is evidently appreciated by the large number of American farmers who have in the past two or three years settled in the Canadian West. The agents of the Canadian Government, whose address will be found elsewhere, advise us that for the fiscal year 1904-5, the records show that 43,543 Americans settled in Canada, and in 1905-6 the number reached 57,796. From all of which, it appears that at present, there is a good thing in farming in Western Canada, and that the American farmer is not slow to avail himself of it.

CATARRH BLOOD DISEASED AND SYSTEM DISORDERED

Catarrh is not merely an inflammation of the tissues of the head and throat, as the symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, mucous dropping back into the throat, continual hawking and spitting, etc., would seem to indicate; it is a blood disease in which the entire circulation and the greater part of the system are involved. Catarrh is due to the presence of an excess of uric acid in the blood. The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels frequently become torpid and dull in their action and instead of carrying off the refuse and waste of the body, leave it to sour and form uric acid in the system. This is taken up by the blood and through its circulation distributed to all parts of the system. These impurities in the blood irritate and inflame the different membranes and tissues of the body, and the contracting of a cold will start the secretions and other disgusting and disagreeable symptoms of Catarrh. As the blood goes to all parts of the body the catarrhal poison affects all parts of the system. The head has a tight, full feeling, nose continually stopped up, pains above the eyes, slight fever comes and goes, the stomach is upset and the entire system disordered and affected by this disease. It is a waste of time to try to cure Catarrh with sprays, washes, inhalations, etc. Such treatment does not reach the blood, and can, therefore, do nothing more than temporarily relieve the discomfort of the trouble. To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be thoroughly purified and the system cleansed of all poisons, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its head, goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal poison from the blood, making this vital stream pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, the head is loosened and cleared, the hawking and spitting cease, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and vigorous health restored. S. S. S. also tones up the stomach and digestion and acts as a fine tonic to the entire system. If you are suffering with Catarrh begin the use of S. S. S. and write us a statement of your case and our physicians will send you literature about Catarrh, and give you special medical advice without charge. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I had Catarrh for about fifteen years, and no man could have been worse. I tried everything I could hear of, but no good resulted. I then began S. S. S., and could see a little improvement from the first bottle, and after taking it a short while was cured. This was six years ago, and I am as well today as any man. I think Catarrh is a blood disease, and know there is nothing on earth better for the blood than S. S. S. Nobody thinks more of S. S. S. than I do. M. MATSON, Lapeer, Mich.

OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT IN COUNTY SEAT CASE

Attorneys Return From St. Paul and Report That Good Progress—Decision Pending.

The County Seat case was argued on Monday. The contesting parties were each give one hour in which to present their argument to the court. The case will probably be referred to either Chief Justice Start or Judge Brown, as they are conversant with all the facts, for a decison.

It was shown that the court had reached the conclusion that it is necessary for the county auditor to authenticate with a seal his official act of administering an oath. The court seemed to be of the opinion, however, that the injunction now pending might be resadjudica of a mandamus proceedings, and also that it was necessary to give a notice to the taxpayers of the county, as required by law, for the second meeting of the board, which was held on the 11th of June 1906.

If the court decides the way it would seem to a casual observer, it will be a victory for Red Lake Falls. However, it is difficult to tell just exactly how the court will hand down its opinion, which will probably be about Jan. 15, 1907.

The attorneys who represented Red Lake Falls and other citizens who were present at the hearing, seemed to be well satisfied with the proceedings of the case up to date, and confidently expect that when decision is handed down it will reverse the trial court.

Of course, it is to be taken into consideration that this stand is assumed on the questions asked by the court of the respective attorneys and the evident desire to become familiar with the disputed points. It is impossible to tell what the decision of the court will be, but the attorneys who have followed the case closely are of the opinion that Red Lake Falls will win.

FIRM DISSOLVES PARTNERSHIP.

Hunt & Krankel, the hardware dealers, will dissolve partnership in a few days. Mr. Hunt's interest will be taken care of by his father, who will conduct the business in the future. Mr. Krankel having decided to go into business for himself and is said to have rented the store just vacated by Berthon & Armstrong, who are now across the street. It is understood that Sam Hunt will take to the road as salesman.

Catarrh of the nose and throat should lead you to at least ask us for free trial box of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. Nothing so surely proves merit as a real, actual test—and Dr. Shoop, to prove this, earnestly desires that we let you make that test. This creamy, Snow White healing balm, soothes the throat and nostrils, and quickly purifies a foul or feverish breath. Call and investigate. All druggists.

TIME TO BOOST THE FIRE TOURNAMENT

Commercial Club and Business Men Are Working Energetically to Make It a Success.

The question uppermost in the minds of the citizens of Red Lake Falls at present is the coming fire tournament to be held in this city in June. Every one who has the city's interest at heart should do all in his power to further the event. The prosperity of a town is not gauged by the wealth of its inhabitants but by the uniformity with which they pull together when any important undertaking is to be accomplished. A man with a thousand dollars at his command and a love for his town in his heart can do more for the upbuilding of it than the millionaire who locks up his capital and snaps his fingers at home progress.

The commercial club and various committees are taking great interest in the matter and it is now up to the business men and the citizens in general to "hop-to-'er" and make it a success. They can do it, and should.

At the last meeting of the Odd Fellows the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

RED LAKE THE PLACE.

That Red Lake county is just as good, if not better than any other place in the state was shown this week when Roy Walker returned from Lyon county, where he thought of locating, and purchased a farm at Terrebone, stating that the land was far better here than at Marshall.

Another instance was that of Mr. Erickson, who had been looking up lands in Cottonwood county, but decided Red Lake had the best of it, so will continue to reside here.

L. R. Cowles, Portland, Ore, was troubled with constipation since childhood and had to use medicine continually to move his bowels. He was in very bad shape. Here is what he says after using one bottle of Dr. Adler's Treatment: "I think your medicine is a wonder. I never felt or looked so well as I do now. Although I am a telegraph operator and work nights, I have gained 10 pounds in the last month." Large dollar bottles at W. A. Schrieter's.

STUDY CLUB CONCERT.

Third of Series Given Before An Appreciative Audience.

The third number of the entertainment course was given Tuesday evening to fairly large audience. If the two preceding entertainments of the course came up to the expectations of the music-loving public the third one far surpassed them.

The Emily Waterman Concert Co. is composed of Misses Waterman, Binkley, Wilson and Mr. Tuttle. Miss Waterman is a reader of rare voice and ability and kept the audience in a state of laughter most of the time. Mr. Tuttle, the flutist, has studied under one of the best instructors in the world, and by his skillful playing held the audience spellbound.

Miss Binkley, the soprano soloist, and Miss Wilson, the saxaphonist and accompanist, are both musicians of marked ability.

The next and fourth number of the course—a lecture by the Hon. G. A. Gearhart, ex-senator of New York—will occur Jan. 4.

These entertainments have proven a great drawing card and a benefit to the public. The citizens who were instrumental in securing this series of entertainments are to be commended on their good work.

Reprint, News-Herald: "There is at least one effectual, safe, and reliable Cough Cure—Dr. Shoop's—that we regard as suitable, even for the youngest child. For years, Dr. Shoop bitterly opposed the use of opiates or narcotics in medicine, offering $10 per drop to any one finding Opium, Chloroform, or any other poisonous or narcotic ingredient in Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. And the challenge is as yet unanswered. Here is one manufacturing physician, who welcomed with much satisfaction, the new Government Pure Food and Drug Law. The public can now protect itself at all times, by insisting on having Dr. Shoop's, when a cough remedy is needed." Sold by all druggists.

A DELIGHTFUL VISIT.

Mr. Ed. Healy, of Red Lake Falls, stopped off Friday night at Osakis to spend a few hours with his father, L. M. Healy. He was enroute home from the cities and the old gentleman sat up all night to visit with his son. The senior Healy is in his 81st year but even the vigorous Minnesota winters have dealt kindly with him and he looks 20 years younger. Mr. Ed. Healy is the man who has recently acquired light and power franchises from Grand Forks and East Grand Forks, and will furnish water power from Red Lake Falls.—Osakis Review.

NEW BAND DIRECTOR COMING THIS WEEK

Able Leader Secured for the Local Band—Will Be Here for the Concert.

We greet the new director!

This sentence will no doubt please the citizens of Red Lake Falls, and especially those who are members of the band.

After untiring efforts on the part of the gentlemen who were intrusted with the work of securing a director one has been induced to take up his residence in this city.

The director is none other than Prof. Emil H. Bruckman, formerly of New York. He is a solo clarinetist of more than usual talent, and an experienced director. Professor Bruckman also teaches all kind of band instruments, which will no doubt be a great help to the members of the band.

Unless signs fail the new director will place the band second to none in the State of Minnesota.

Professor Bruckman will direct the coming concert at the Metropolitan Opera house, Dec. 27.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

A LONG ROOT.

Reached From Victim's Tooth to His Leg.

An Irishman, with one jaw very much swollen from a tooth that he wished to have pulled, entered the office of a Washington dentist.

When the suffering Celt was put into the chair and saw the gleaming forceps approaching his face, he positively refused to open his mouth. Being a man of resource, the dentist quietly instructed his assistant to push a pin into the patient's leg, so that when the Irishman opened his mouth to yell the dentist could get at the refractory molar.

"When all was over, the dentist smilingly asked:

"It didn't hurt as much as you expected, did it?"

"Well, no, reluctantly admitted the patient. "But," he added, as he ran his hand over the place into which the assistant had inserted the pin, "little did I think them roots wint that far down!"

BURNHAM GUILTY SAYS THE JURY

FIRST CONVICTION GROWING OUT OF INSURANCE INVESTIGATION.

CHARGE OF LARCENY HOLDS

VICE PRESIDENT OF MUTUAL RESERVE USED FUNDS ILLEGALLY.

New York, Dec. 13.—George Burnham, Jr., a vice president and general counsel of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance company, yesterday was convicted of larceny of $7,500 of the company's funds. The prosecution and conviction of Burnham was an outgrowth of the investigation of insurance companies in this state by a legislative committee a year ago. Two other officers of the insurance company, Frederick A. Burnham, president, and George D. Eldridge, vice president, were indicted at the same time as the man who was convicted yesterday. Five indictments were returned against each of the defendants.

False Entries in Books.

The charge against George Burnham, Jr., is that in 1901 he paid J. Douglass Wells with company funds for a loan alleged to have been made to Frederick A. Burnham, the president, and that the payment was concealed by false entries in the books of the insurance company.

One of the sensational features of the trial which ended yesterday was the production of a check by the prosecution which bore the name of Louis F. Payn, former superintendent of insurance, and the United States Express company, of which Senator Platt is president. It was not claimed, however, that Burnham paid the amount of this check to Mr. Payn, but that it was used to resist an alleged demand by Payn for $100,000 from the life insurance company.

SENATOR BROWN DYING.

Utah Man's Chances of Surviving Are Slim.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Former United States Senator Arthur Brown, who was shot down in his room at the Raleigh hotel last Saturday by Mrs. Anna M. Bradley, is gradually sinking and his death may occur at any moment.

Oklahoma Constitutional Delegates Have Heated Debate.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 13.—The constituaional convention yesterday entered into a heated discussion of the question of whether the supreme being should be designated as the "supreme ruler of the universe" or "God Almighty." Carnegie Is Said to Plan Increase to Arbitration Trust.

Washington, Dec. 13. — Intimations were given out last night upon what appears to be reliable authority that Andrew Carnegie has expressed a determination to add to the Nobel peace prize fund which has been turned over to the president and by him set aside as a permanent fund in the aid of conferences to promote industrial peace in the settlement of labor and other differences, a substantial contribution.

ADMITS BOLD ROBBERY.

Man Arrested for One Kansas Crime Confesses to Another.

Great Bend, Kan., Dec. 13.—Joseph S. Kearns, the former Chicago dry goods clerk and newspaper man who was captured here last Saturday after robbing a Great Bend bank in broad daylight, confessed to having robbed the Midland National bank at Newton, Kan., on the afternoon of Nov. 13, when he locked the clerks and customers, six in all, in the bank vault and escaped with $1,800.

FRENCH CHURCH BATTLE IS ON

PAPAL NUNCIO IS ARRESTED AND EXPELLED FROM THE REPUBLIC.

Paris, Dec. 13. — Mgr. Montagnini, secretary of the papal nunciature here since the recall of the nuncio, was arrested upon an order expelling him from France, and last night, accompanied by a commissary of police, departed for the Italian frontier.

Yesterdy was a historic day for France. The struggle which began in 1880 with the banishment of the Jesuits ended yesterday with the legal rupture of the bond which for practically a thousand years uninterruptedly has united church and state. By the refusal of the required declaration, under the public meeting law of 1881, public Catholic worship, except by schismatic organizations, to-day becomes illegal.

Excitement at Vatican.

Rome, Dec. 13. — Contrary to his usual habit, the pope remained up until a late hour last night for the purpose of personally reading the telegrams and going over certain documents concerning the situation in France.

Persons thoroughly familiar with the Vatican affairs declare that no such excitement and apprehension has prevailed at the Vatican since the loss of temporal power.

IMPOSES FINES OF $150,000.

Sugar Trust and Cooperage Company Punished for Rebating.

New York, Dec. 13.—Fines aggregating $150,000 were imposed yesterday upon the American Sugar Refining company, and the Brooklyn Cooperage company, after the defendants, through counsel, had pleaded guilty to indictments charging the acceptance of rebates on sugar shipments. The sugar refining company was fined $80,000 and the cooperage company $70,000.

After the fines were imposed United States District Attorney Stimson, who conducted the prosecution, told the court that he thought the amount of the fines assessed was sufficiently large to act as deterrent to rebaters in the future and that the government would consent to the remainder of the indictments against the American Sugar Refining company and the Brooklyn Cooperage company being dismissed. Judge Holt granted a motion dismissing the other indictments.

FIGHTS MANIC IN THE DARK.

Englewood (S. D.) Man Binds Madman Who Entered House.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 13. — Fred Clark of Englewood was awakened at midnight by the breaking of window glass, and springing from his bed found himself face to face with a maniac. The demented man was A. Fredericks, a neighbor. Clark grappled with his mad visitor and the two men were soon in a desperate struggle on the floor. Just as he was almost overcome Clark secured a hold on the maniac's throat and choked him into submission. He then bound him firmly with a rope and brought him in yesterday before the authorities.

MRS. BIRDSONG GUILTY.

Jury Recommends Her to Mercy of Court.

Hazelhurst, Miss., Dec. 13. — In one of the saddest court room scenes on record in the state, Mrs. Angie Birdsong was yesterday found guilty of manslaughter for killing Dr. Thomas Butler and was recommended to the mercy of the court.

Mrs. Birdsong, twenty-two years of age and a member of a leading Mississippi family, in November, 1905, shot and killed Dr. Thomas Butler, also prominently related. She alleged that he boasted of illicit relations with her and that his boasts were untrue.

LOOKS GOOD FOR MINNESOTA.

Interest on Indian War Bonds Will Probably Be Paid.

Washington, Dec. 13.—The claim of the State of Minnesota against the federal government for interest on the bonds issued in 1862 to raise money to suppress the Indian uprising of that year, will in all probability be adjudicated by congress in accordance with an opinion just rendered by the controller of the treasury. Nearly $70,000 is involved. The case was submitted to the house yesterday by the secretary of the treasury.

HARRIMAN PROBE ON DEC. 28.

New York, Dec. 14. — Led by District Attorney Jerome, the police last night raided an alleged gambling house and arrested 144 men who were charged with having refused to aid the police when a felony was being committed. Fictitious names are given following such a raid, but last night the district attorney instructed the sergeant at the police station to require the bondsmen to make oath that the prisoners' names and addresses as given were correct. In nearly every case the bondsmen refused to give bail. The result was that at a late hour the majority of the 144 men were still held in cells. The unusual charge against the 144 prisoners grew out of an earlier attempt to enter the place. A detective had mounted a ladder and through a window saw what he thought was gambling. FILES COMPLAINT WITH GOVERNOR

BOARD PARTIAL TO J. J. HILL

St. Paul, Dec. 12. — James Manahan, attorney of the Minnesota Receivers and Shippers' association, yesterday filed charges against the members of the railroad and warehouse commission with Gov. J. A. Johnson.

In a long statement he says:

"We accuse Ira B. Mills, Charles F. Staples and William E. Young, who are, without warrant of law, assuming to act as the railroad and warehouse commission of Minnesota, of neglect of duty, inefficiency and malfeasance in office.

"We charge the said Ira B. Mills, Charles F. Staples and William E. Young, as a board and each of them separately as a commissioner, of being partial to James J. Hill, a representative of railroad interests, and unfair to the people of Minnesota to a degree that renders them inefficient."

Alleged Neglect of Duty.

The following instances of alleged neglect of duty are enumerated:

Have failed to exercise general supervision of railroads in Minnesota.

Have failed to obtain from such railroads information in regard to rebates, discriminations and excessive charges.

Have for years failed to learn the terms of the contract between the Northern Pacific and Milwaukee roads for handling traffic in Minnesota, and knowingly permitted the Milwaukee road to charge unreasonable and extortionate freight rates.

Zealous in Behalf of Railroads.

Have for years permitted railroads to charge for hauling coal a rate they knew to be excessive.

Have co-operated with the railroads in withholding from the people the advantages of proximity to a port on the Great Lakes.

Have been recreant in their duties generally and only zealous in their efforts to avoid offending the railroad interests.

Have tried to protect the Omaha road from "the proof and odium of spending money for political purposes and charging the same to operating expenses of the road."

The complaint specifies that the commissioners were guilty of misconduct in office because the commission did not allow the railroad witness to be cross-examined.

SOUTH ST. PAUL GETS PLANT.

St. Paul, Dec. 12.—Inducements offered the Armour Packing company to locate at South St. Paul have practically snatched the big prize from Minneapolis and New Brighton.

The bonuses offered are said to consist of stock in the Union Stock Yards company, an interest in the Stock Yards bank at South St. Paul and perhaps the building of a preliminary plant, aggregating in value $1,000,000.

Any one of these concessions is a big prize, but when the three are considered they constitute what is said to have been Mr. Ogden Armour's original demand and a bonus that cannot be well overlooked.

The news of the last move of St Paul to secure the big plant has created consternation in Minneapolis. The boomers of the New Brighton site thought the industry was cinched, though all along St. Paul has been most favorably viewed by the Armours, but now extraordinary efforts are being made to offset St. Paul's latest move. CASH PRIZES FOR FARM BOYS.

Seed Contest Among the Pupils of Rural Schools.

A good seed contest was inaugurated last year by Prof. D. D. Mayne, principal of the state farm school, among the pupils of the rural schools of the state. The sum of $200 will be given to some pupil from the rural schools of Minnesota for the best ten ears produced in the state. Besides this prize for corn, there will be a like prize for the best peck of oats and the best peck of wheat.

Seed contests were held by the pupils in the rural schools of sixty counties. In each county of the state where there is a farmers' club, composed of former students of the school of agriculture, the contest was held under the direction of the club and the county superintendent.

A bulletin on "Rural School Agriculture" was issued by the farm school authorities in which rules governing the seed contests were given. Besides giving the rules the bulletin was prepared so that it might be used as a text book in elementary agriculture, giving the rudiments in such a manner that the rural school teacher could, with the use of the bulletin, give instruction as to the best method to grow wheat, corn and oats.

Some of the county superintendents have aroused great interest in the production of better grain. Many counties report from 100 to 600 entries in the county contests. Those winning at the county contests will be eligible to compete at the state contest, which will be held the second week in January, under the auspices of the Field Crop Breeders 'association, at the time of the annual meeting of the state agricultural society.

The prizes given in the state contest come from the milling and elevator interests represented in the Minneapolis chamber of commerce. They have given $3,000 to be used as prize money, $1,000 of which will be given each year for three years. This money was not offered primarily to help the boys. It is a business proposition. The wheat, oats and corn entered in the contest must be produced in accordance with a bulletin issued by the school of agriculture. The effect of this contest will be to increase the yield of better grain for the State of Minnesota. In this way the donors of the prize money will get what they wish to secure.

The prizes offered in the state contest are the same for wheat, oats and corn, and are: First, $200; second, $100; third, $13.33; fourth, $10; fifth, $5; sixth, $5.

FARMERS HARVEST TREE CROP.

State Will Pay Bounty to 3,000 This Year.

The state auditor's office force is engaged in sending out the annual batch of Christmas presents from the state to deserving farmers. At least that is what the warrants are called in the office. Technically they are tree bounty warrants. There are 3,000 of them and they aggregate $20,000.

The tree bounty is a relic of the early days when a law was passed to encourage the farmers to plant trees on the prairie. The encouragement took the form of a bounty of $2.50 for every acre devoted to tree raising. The first year in which tree bounties were paid was in 1877, when the bounty amounted to $276.

The amount increased rapidly, however, and since 1886 the annual expense on this account has averaged $20,000. This is the limit of the appropriation. If the claims exceed that amount the bounty is cut down. This year it is $2.30 an acre. The banner tree bounty counties are Redwood and Renville, the former reporting 882 1-2 acres this year and receiving $2,029.17, and the latter 641 1-2 acres and receiving $1,475.45.

There are forty-two counties in the western and southwestern parts of the state in which the bounties are paid. The limit for one man is on ten acres and the bounties are paid for only six years. The law requires that the trees be planted eight to twelve feet apart, cultivated each year and all dead trees replaced the next year.

The claimants for tree bounties file their claims with the county auditor. If their claim is substantiated by the assessor it is sent in by the county auditor to the state auditor's office, where a complete record of all claims is kept.

MADE BIG LOANS.

Loans amounting to about $200,000 have been made by the state board of investment. Several large loans were made for school purposes, as follows: Brainerd, $35,000, refunding; Biwabik, $15,000; Chisholm, $15,000; Elbow Lake, $25,000; St. Peter, $35,000; Blue Earth, $8,500.

The city of Barnesville got a loan of $28,270.86 for an electric light and water plant, and Tracy got a loan of $12,000 for the same purpose. Wadena and Otter Tail counties got a loan of $4,305 for a drainage ditch.

GOOD ROADS LAW NEEDS FIXING.

State Association Will Suggest Some Changes.

The 1907 legislature will be asked to do things that will revolutionize good roads work in Minnesota during the next two years if the amendments proposed at the opening session of the Minnesota Good Roads association, held in the capitol at St. Paul, are approved. The most important changes proposed by the state highway commission, which were discussed recently by the association, follow:

First—To abolish the office of county surveyor and provide for the appointment by the county board of a commissioner of highways, under a salary to be fixed by the board, whose duties shall be to provide plans and specifications for and superintend the expenditure of all county road and bridge funds and to supervise also the work of town commissioners of highways.

Second — To abolish the office of road overseer and provide for the appointment by the town board of one town commissioner of highways, under a salary to be fixed by the board, whose duties shall be to supervise the expenditure of all town road and bridge funds under the instruction of the county commissioner of highways.

Third—To abolish the statute labor tax and pay all road taxes in cash.

Others are that the state highway commission have full power to construct and repair state roads and that the commission be not obliged to pay even the minimum amount of $300 under the present law to counties that refuse to keep their roads in good repair. If the bill increasing the good roads apportionment from $70,000 to $200,000 is passed the minimum amount allowed each county would be about $1,200, and if the sum is not to be expended on improving the county roads the highway commissioners feel that it should not be appropriated. The commission also holds that the present laws of Minnesota are against the construction of good roads and that it should be compulsory for each county to keep its roads in good repair.

Another recommendation by the commission presented before the association was that the state aid for good roads work be increased to 1 mill, which would bring the total apportionment to $200,000. The commissioners further wish the privilege of fixing the salaries of its employes and do not consider that the legislature can rate the ability of men who have yet to appear. The salary paid the present state engineer is considered far from adequate.

If the commission has its way the farmer no longer will be able to work out his road tax, but will have to pay the same in coin of the realm. The town clerks will be obliged to forward statements of the amount spent by the townships on the road work so as to enable the commission to base its estimates. State roads are not to be torn up or disturbed for any purpose without the consent of the commission, and no township or board of county commissioners is to be allowed the privilege of granting to any corporation the right to undermine or cross a state road without the consent of the commission. Weeds must be cut from the sides of the roads during September, and the use of wide tires on heavy wagons is urged, the width of the tire varying with the capacity of the wagon. Owing to the area of Minnesota and the numerous sparsely settled vicinities macadamized roads are not advocated, with the exception of portions of three counties, Ramsey, Hennepin and St. Louis. Gravel roads are sufficient in other counties.

The next thing in order is the New Year resolution.

Have you purchased your Christmas presents? The rush will be on in a few days. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

The recent decision by the United States Supreme court in dismissing the case of Albert T. Patrick, the New York lawyer, convicted of murdering millionaire Rice, again demonstrated that "while there is life there is hope."

A few weeks ago Bro. Bronson of the Osakis Review was elected a director of one of the local banks and now another paper is to be established in his town. This ought to be a lesson to the rest of the millionaire editors. Don't show your money.

The corporations are preparing for their bi-ennial fight for special privileges. Many wise ones maintain that the coming session of the legislature will be the most venal in the history of the state, since the special interests feel that a revolution is in the air and they intend to get all they can while they have friends in the law making bodies. The incoming legislature has the chance to do splendid service for the people, but have the members the moral fibre and courage to stand out against the peculiar temptations of the corporation lobby?.

Governor Johnson has announced that Insurance Commission O'Brien Superintendent Olson, Public Examiner Kerst, State Librarian King, Dairy Commissioner Slater, and Labor Commissioner Williams will be retained under the next administration, and there will be few if any changes in the subordinate positions in these departments. It is taken as a matter of course that Oil Inspector McDermott and Adjutant General Wood will also be re-appointed. Fred E. Wheaton, late Democratic candidate for clerk of the supreme court, will get one of the fat jobs—that of surveyor general of logs and lumber in the Minneapolis district. Fred has legions of friends who will congratulate him upon this desired recognition.

Wanted—Gentleman or lady with good reference to travel by rail or with a rig for a firm of $250,000.00 capital. Salary $1072.00 per year and expenses advanced. Address, with stamp, Jos. A. Alexander, Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

FILLING UP THE CANADIAN WEST.

The American Settler Is Welcomed to Canada.

A number of the leading newspapers on this side of the line have been noticing the growth of the Canadian West in recent years, and draw attention to the fact that there seems to be no abatement of the influx of settlers to that great grain-growing country. The Buffalo Express thus refers to the subject:

"Canada West continues to grow. There were 4,174 homesteads entries there in July of this year, as against 3,571 in July, 1905. Canada plumes herself over this fact, with becoming pride. But what appears to make our neighbors happiest is the statement that of these 4,174 homesteaders, 1,212 were from this side of the line. Little is said about the 97 Canadians who recrossed the border to take up homes in Canada West, or of the 808 from Great Britain, or of the 1,236 from non-British countries. It appears that the item in this July report that makes Canada rejoice most is this of the 1,212 American farmers who decided to try their fortunes in Canada West.

"The compliment is deserved. The 1,212 were mostly from Dakota and other farming states, and go into Canada fitted better than any other class of immigrants for developing the new country. They take capital with them, too, say Canadian papers proudly. In every way, they are welcome over there."

As the Express well says, the American is welcomed to Canada, and the reasons given are sufficient to invite the welcome. The American farmer knows thoroughly the farming conditions that prevail in the Canadian prairie provinces, and is aware of every phase of agricultural development in recent years.

In practical knowledge of what is wanted to get the largest return for labor and investment he is by long odds superior to any European settler. He knows what is required to bring success, and he is able and willing to do it, and his future causes no apprehension to the successful Canadian farmer. The agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere, says that the difference between the manners and customs of the farmer from Dakota, Oregon or Minnesota and the farmer from Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta is not nearly so marked as that between the farmer of the Maritime provinces and the Ontario tiller of the soil. Hence the welcome to the free homesteads of the Canadian West, and there are hundreds of thousands of them left, that is extended to the settler from the Western States.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

The sergeant raised his hat, and Mr. and Mrs. Billery shook hands with him. Billery was so surprised and delighted at being married that he wanted to introduce Mrs. Billery to the waiters, to porters, railway guards, anybody in short, for the mere beautiful novelty of being able to say, "My wife." And Belle was just as pleasurably amazed at being married as Billery, himself, and whenever he had a chance of saying "My wife" or "Ma femme" in her hearing her heart glowed within her, and reflected itself in her face in smiles.

"Mr. Holt and I," said Billery, "had a rather interesting professional association with each other once upon a time."

"Indeed," said Belle.

"I am in Paris, Mr. Billery," said the sergeant, "in regard to that very identical case to-day."

"You've got on to a new track, I suppose?" asked Billery.

"No, sir," the sergeant answered, gravely, "it's the old track. We've got him this time, I fancy."

"Good heavens!" said Billery. "You don't mean to say that that absurd old suspicion is still seriously entertained?"

"I do, sir," Holt returned. "The case goes to trial this time for a certainty."

"Well," said Billery, "you'll find that you've made the error of a lifetime. The man you are following is as innocent as you are."

"We make mistakes sometimes," replied Holt. "But there's a tremendous deal in this case as will have to be explained away. There's one fact come to light quite lately which looks as if it clinched it."

"I'll stake my life on it," said Billery, "you're wrong."

"I shall be a good deal surprised if it turns out so," Holt Answered. "But in any case the party is under close observation now, and I'm open to bet a fi'-pun' note he's under arrest to-morrow."

"We return to-night to London, Mrs. Billery and I. I ought to tell you that I am much more strongly on his side now than I ever was against him. I shall feel it my duty to warn him of what is going to happen."

"You're free to do what you like in that respect, sir," said the sergeant: "If your news should set him on the move he'll be nabbed at once. You'd better put him on his guard in that particular likewise."

"I think you need have no fear of any attempted evasion," said Billery, with a laugh.

"We shall see, sir," Holt replied; "I shall have everything in hand to-night, I expect, and shall be back in town to-morrow evening. If there's any information at my disposal as you'd care to use professionally, sir, you're welcome to it. We owe you that much, sir, for the work we're indebted to you. Good morning, sir. Good morning, ma'am."

"Why, Hamilton," cried Belle, "ye look quite miserable. What is it?"

"The police believe that Aloysius Brangwyn murdered his uncle," Billery made answer.

"Oh, no, no!" cried Belle. "I never liked the man, but I can't believe him capable of that. Ye're going to warn him?"

"I'm going to warn him," said Billery. "I have reason to believe that he has such proofs of innocence in his possession that they will never dare lay a hand upon him. He must be ready with them."

CHAPTER XXIV.

At Victoria a surprise awaited the returning holidaymakers, for no less a person than Miss Lee was waiting on the platform in expectation of her friends. The two ladies rushed together, and there was a mighty deal of kissing and embracing.

"How well you are looking," cried Lilian. "So brown and rosy and happy. And you, too, Mr. Billery. I think the holiday has improved you both immensely."

"How delightful, how thoughtful, how kind, how sweet of ye!" cried Belle. "We didn't expect to be met be anybody, an' to be met be you, ye darlin'! 'Tis just heavenly."

"It is like everything Miss Lee does, or is," said Billery, "most good and kind."

"How well you both are looking!" said Lilian.

"For my own part," Billery declared, "I feel like a giant—at present unrefreshed."

"I have ordered breakfast in my sitting room at the hotel. You will come to my room, Belle, dear, and make a little toilette there. Mr. Billery must look after himself. Will you join us as soon as you can in No. 99, Mr. Billery?"

"In half an hour," said Billery, and having seen to his luggage went into the hotel for a bath and a change, emerging presently looking extremely crisp and rosy.

Meantime his wife went through the same program, with Lilian acting as her maid, and they chatted nineteen to the dozen, breaking in on conversation with hugs and kisses twice a minute or thereabouts.

"I needn't ask if you're happy," said Lilian.

"Indeed then, ye need not. He's the most delightful creature in the world. We've had our first cross word, and I believe 'tis likely to be our last. 'Twas I that was it. I was tired, an' I was cross an' peevish, an' I snapped at him. For just half a second he looked hurt, and then he laughed—ye haven't noticed what a delightful laugh he has—and he came up to me an' he kissed me, and says he, 'Ye must have your own way. If a lady's not to have her own way on her honeymoon, when is she entoytled to ut?' And I had just a nice refreshin' little cry, and 'twas all over. He's the most biddable creature I ever knew, and there's no end to his tact and thoughtfulness. And I'd no idea he was such a linguist. We began with Vienna, and from there we went to Trieste and then down the Adriatic to Naples, and from Naples to Marseilles, and from Marseilles to Monte Carlo. And wherever he was ye'd have taken him for a native. 'Twas just lovely to hear him."

They talked of many things, but Billery was still the burden of Belle's song.

"Why, my darling," said Lilian laughing, "you are over head and heels in love with him."

"'Deed I am, then," said Belle. "Fathoms! And I'd be a poor creature if I weren't. He has the kindest heart an' the sweetest temper. I never met a man that was a tenth part as clever. He's the soul of honor. And I'll tell ye one thing, me dear." The one thing was murmured into Lilian's ear with Lilian's arms about her neck, and Belle wept a little in the telling. "Ye know the one failing the poor dear man ever had. Mr. Truscott took charge of him for a time, and 'twas arranged between them that he might give way once a month. And the month came round at Marseilles. He suffered till I cried. I nursed him through three awful days, and he never yielded. And at the end of it he gave me this."

Belle drew her purse from her pocket and took from the purse a little folded document, which she opened and handed to her friend. Lilian read it with some difficulty, for Belle had wept upon it so copiously that the ink had run and the writing was much blurred.

"I make this promise to my beloved wife and upon my honor as a Christian. I will never again taste ardent spirits, nor will I drink wine except at dinner.—Hamilton Billery."

"I am so glad, dear. So glad!" said Lilian. "You trust him?"

"Oh, I trust him," Belle answered, mopping at her eyes with a filmy little bit of lace and muslin. Mr. Truscott, who is a true, true friend, spoke about Hamilton's trouble to me quite frankly. He knew that Hamilton and I had talked the matter over and he said to me, 'It's the dear man's one failin', and I hope that mar'ge may cure him. If ye can get him to make ye a promise, says he, he's safe. Get him to make a promise upon his word of honor, says Mr. Truscott, and he'd not break it to save his lofe. We're friends, says he; since childhood, and I've never known Hamilton Billery to go back upon his word. And oh, Lilian, me darlin', ye don't know, ye can't know, what that half sheet of notepaper means to me. Me heart's like a singing bird in me bosom every time I look at it. And I see him getting happier and easier and healthier every day. He told me yesterday that since he signed that promise he'd hardly given the thing a thought and hardly felt a wish. 'I suppose,' says he, 'that now that Ould Nick knows that I've given him a mortal defoyance his imperial highness won't waste his time upon me.' Ah, me darlin', I'm a happy woman."

Lilian kissed her with her whole heart, and they went down stairs entwined together like two of the Three Graces. And the girl who had known and loved the unmistakably plain Belle Molloy could hardly believe she was one and the same with the beaming little woman whom happiness had made almost beautiful. For let it be known unto all ladies in all lands that, just as there is no cosmatic like cold water, so there is no such beautifier of the female countenance as love with contentment.

Billery was smoking the cigarette of patience in the corridor when they entered upon it, and the trio sat down to breakfast. The meal went gaily to its close.

"And now," said Lilian, "you may prepare for a shock. I am going to be your first visitor. Can you make room for me?"

"Make room!" cried Belle. "We would make room for ye if we had to sleep in the greenhouse."

"And so say all of us," said Billery. "We shall be honored and rejoiced. I begin work again to-morrow, and I have been thinking that my wife would be lonely in the long evening hours.

"We've the spare room ye always slept in," Belle said, "and 'twill be in readiness for ye when ye arroive."

"Upon my word," said Billery, "I am growing superstitious. I feel as if your visit will be an omen of high good fortune. It's very pleasant to think that so dear a friend of my wife should be with us at the beginning of our housekeeping." After a while in a pause in the talk he said, with a sudden seriousness, "I must be going. I shall not be away for more than an hour I suppose, but I am going to call on Alex. He must come down with me and explain that business to his cousin."

"Yes," replied Billery, "I am going to ask him to travel down with us. There is some rather unpleasant tidings which I want to ask him to carry to Mr. Aloysius Brangwyn. Alex and I are old chums, but Aloysius and I only just know each other, and he has some reason to dislike me."

"You must not go upon that errand," said Lilian, gravely. "Alexis will not meet his cousin. I am very sorry, but there is a division between them, and both of them say that it is final."

At this Billery looked very serious indeed.

"This is a dreadful pity," he said. "Dare I ask—I would not dare if it were not a question of moment—can you tell me which of them is answerable for the misunderstanding?"

"I can tell you that," said Lilian. "Alexis confesses that he alone is to blame."

"Thank Heaven for that!" Billery broke out so impulsively that Lilian started at his tone.

"Why do you say that in such a way?" she asked.

"Well," said Billery, "I am the unwilling bearer of most unpleasant news, and if the condition of things had been reversed—if, I mean, it had been Alexis who declined to receive his cousin—it might have put an ugly color on what I have to say."

"Is there any trouble?" Lilian asked

"Yes, Miss Lee, there is a little trouble, but I have the best of reasons for believing that it will be dissipated in a moment, and that you will never hear of it."

"Deal candidly with me, Mr. Billery," Lilian besought him. She had grown very pale, and her beautiful lips even trembled a little. "I can bear anything rather than suspense."

"Tell her," said Belle. "She'll laugh the thing to scorn, as I do."

Thus urged, Billery spoke.

"It's nothing less than the re-dishing of the old suspicions against Aloysius. I have the best of grounds—the very best of grounds—for believing that he holds overwhelming proofs of his own innocence. You know, perhaps, Miss Lee, that I was at one time engaged in the inquiry. I am ashamed to say now that at that time I believed him to be guilty."

"That he should be guilty is impossible," said Lilian. "That is outside nature. A nobler heart, a gentler, never beat. A man more rooted in honor than Aloysius never breathed. I know him as few know him, and I would answer for him with my life."

The tears flashed in her eyes but did not fall.

"So would I," answered Billery, "now that I understand him better than I did. But the news I have to take him is distressing to me and cannot be other than a grave annoyance to himself."

"Tell me," said Lilian.

"He will be arrested to-morrow," Billery answered.

"I am glad to know it for his sake. There will be a public inquiry and he will be forced to clear himself. He has disdained to do it until now. Alexis himself at one time suspected him and helped to spread suspicion. That is one reason why they are divided now, although they both aver another and one more serious."

"Ye take it well, me dear," said Belle, laying a hand on one of hers. "Ye take it as I looked to ye to take it."

"You must come with me," Lilian answered, rising from the table. "But I will take this news to Aloysius. It will come to him more gently from me than from anybody else. I knew him as soon as I knew my own father, and he is so sure of my affection and esteem that it would not hurt him as it would if the news were told by one who is half a stranger."

THEIR CHILDREN ARE SIMILAR.

The Two Mrs. Delands Laugh Over the Coincidence of Characters.

"Did you ever write a thing that you thought particularly good, some of the sentences rounding out in a way that fairly delighted you, and then wake up the next morning with the terrible haunting idea that you had read the same thing before?" one writer asked another; and then they talked of the coincidences that have disturbed the two writers, Mrs. Margaret Deland and Mrs. Ellen Deland. Mrs. Margaret Delnad wrote "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," and Ellen Douglas Deland, who writes for children, brought out at the same time "A Little Son of Sunshine." The child in Mrs. Deland's book and the "Little Son" are so much alike that one author might easily have conceived both of them. Mrs. Ellen Douglas Deland was the first to become aware of the similarity of the children, and she and the other Mrs. Deland had a good laugh over it.

Queer Places of Amusement.

The walls of stations on the new tube from Waterloo to Baker street are embellished with maps of London, on which, according to the index in a corner of them, "theaters and places of amusement are printed in red." Among the places so indicated on the body of the maps are Holloway Cattle Market, the Foundling Hospital, the Courts of Justice, the Bank of England and Spurgeon's Tabernacle.—London Tribune.

LIFEBOAT ON A RAFT.

Invention of Maryland Man Is a Unique Combination.

In a wreck at sea when a storm is raging lifeboats are often capsized by the tempestuous waves, and the occupants, who thought they were safe, are thrown into the water. In such cases the bottom of an overturned boat does not afford a very good hold for the hands.

A Maryland inventor has solved the problem by making a combination lifeboat and raft. The latter is rectangular in shape and normally rests in the center of the boat as shown. The frame is constructed of a number of air-tight compartments and is open in the center. Suspended from the opening is a net and around the outer edges are rope handles, attached to cork floats. The sides of the raft serve as seats in the boat, and in event of the latter capsizing, it will float away from the boat, affording a life-saving means to those able to grasp it. By using air-tight compartments the raft will hold up several persons, and the net within affords a protection to stand within the raft. The rope handles are also easily grasped. When cast in the vicinity of drowning persons, it acts as a support until they can be rescued by the crew of the boat, who in the meantime may be engaged in the rescue of other unfortunates.

LONG-LOST WATCH FOUND.

It Disappeared in War Times, Forty-Five Years Ago.

A gold watch lost by the Polk family many years ago was recovered recently in Springfield, Mo. The watch was owned by Dr. William J. Polk, an uncle of James K. Polk, a former president of the United States. He lost it during the war.

A jeweler in Springfield, Mo., bought a gold watch recently from a stranger. The gold in it was worth $35 and that was the price the jeweler paid for it.

Upon the inside of the case was engraved:

A legacy to
Dr. William J. Polk
from Mrs. Sarah J. Polk, 1843.

From Dr. Polk
to Allen J. Polk, 1860.

A card in the back of the watch showed that it had been repaired by Thomas Gowdy of Nashville, Tenn., December, 1852. Under this card was a circular piece of white silk, which to one of a romantic turn voiced some tender sentiment of the past.

A remarkable thing about this old and well-worn timepiece is that it still runs.

The attention of Major Dorsey Berry (who is one of the Polk family on his mother's side) was called to the watch and he immediately placed himself in communication with Marshal Mayes of Nashville, Tenn. In reply he received a letter from a direct descendant of Dr. William J. Polk, expressing his appreciation of his kindness and marveling over the strange recovery of the watch. Its disappearance had always been a mystery, though the supposition was that it had been stolen during the war. In the letter was a check covering the jeweler's price and a request that he express it to a granddaughter of Dr. William J. Polk, which was complied with.—Kansas City Star.

DOES YOUR BACK ACHE?

Profit by the Experience of One Who Has Found Relief.

James R. Keeler, retired farmer, of Fenner street, Cazenovia, N. Y., says: "About fifteen years ago I suffered with my back and kidneys. I doctored and used many remedies without getting relief. Beginning with Doan's Kidney Pills, I found relief from the first box, and two boxes restored me to good, sound condition. My wife and many of my friends have used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results and I can earnestly recommend them."

Worth Knowing About.

If you need a first-class laxative, there is nothing better nor safer than that old family remedy, Brandreth's Pills. Each pill contains one grain of solid extract of sarsaparilla, which, with other valuable vegetable products, make it a blood purifier of excellent character. If you are troubled with constipation, one pill at night will afford great relief.

Brandreth's Pills are the same fine laxative tonic pill your grandparents used. They have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, either plain or sugar-coated.

CURIOUS PEASANT SUPERSTITION

Horses Ridden by the Spirits—Winds That Waft Thanks of the Dead.

It was formerly almost universally believed that on All Saints' day the dead were permitted to leave their tombs and to roam abroad, says the London Tribune. In some parts of Britanny, and in other places, the peasants even now are careful to lock up their horses in the stables lest the dead, rising from their graves in the early morning, should seize them and ride furiously to some distant spot they may have frequented in life.

In the Northern departments people refrain from slamming doors sharply on this day lest they should hurt an invisible spirit entering, and the children are forbidden to throw stones into the hedges or trees for fear that the missiles should wound the soul of some departed relation or friend hovering about in them.

In Alsace little lamps, lanterns and glimmering tapers arranged in the form of a cross are seen burning all night long close to the ground in many a cemetery. They are destined to rejoice the souls as they rise from their graves.

Perhaps the most common of all superstitions concerning the dead is that about noon on All Saints' day there comes a gentle gust of wind. The peasants in the fields raise their heads in the hope and expectation of feeling it, for it is the dead wafting their thanks to the living for their prayers and remembrance of them.

NO MEDICINE.

But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.

Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels.

A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.

The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ails result.

Too much fat also is hard to digest, and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloaty, heavy feeling.

In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes:

"About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from eating starchy and greasy food.

"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and sides, and I became discouraged.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better, and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since.

"I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast, and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

TORTURED WITH ECZEMA.

Tremendous Itching Over Whole Body—Scratched Until Bled—Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"Last year I suffered with a tremendous itching on my back, which grew worse and worse, until it spread over the whole body, and only my face and hands were free. For four months or so I suffered torments, and I had to scratch, scratch, scratch, until I bled. At night when I went to bed things got worse, and I had at times to get up and scratch my body all over, until I was as sore as could be, and until I suffered excrutiating pains. They told me that I was suffering from eczema. Then I made up my mind that I would use the Cuticuria Remedies. I used them according to instructions, and very soon indeed I was greatly relieved. I continued until well, and now I am ready to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to any one. Mrs. Mary Metzger, Sweetwater, Okla., June 28, 1905."

PROMINENT MERCHANTS

Discuss Interesting Topics Relative to Catalogue Houses.

Patrick Casey of the Potter-Casey Mercantile company of Aitkin, Minn., in a recent interview in the Aitkin Republican, says:

"The local merchants can sell goods, quality considered, as cheaply as mail order houses, and invite patrons of such houses to submit their lists of goods wanted to the local merchants before sending away.

"The interests of the farmer and merchant are identical. Each is engaged in building up—the merchant is building up his business and the farmer is developing his farm and making as much profit out of it as possible. Each is dependent (and will be more and more in the future) on one another for their prosperity. The mail order patron sends away for his goods because he believes he can buy them at a lower price. The merchant claims he can sell as cheap as the mail order house. The mail order patron is as loyal to his home town and county as anybody else, and if he believes he can buy at home as cheaply as he does abroad, he will buy at home."

It would seem that the essential thing necessary for the well being and prosperity of any town and the section of the country contiguous to it is a better understanding between merchant and farmer—a studying of each other's viewpoint

Merchants Must Advertise.

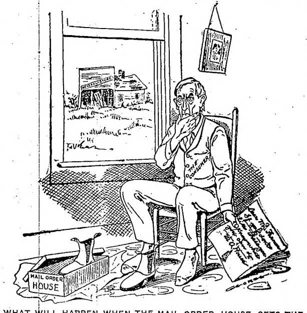
In his address at the Rochester, Minn., Merchants' association last week Mr. J. J. Reiter, among other matter, discussed the mail order house question. He said:

"The merchants curse the catalogue houses. In many cases the farmer and others who patronize the mail order house could do just as well or better at home, and ought to patronize the home dealer. But in many instances the Rochester merchant is still to blame. The mail order concerns send out huge catalogues with fine illustrations and quote prices. Do the city merchants take one-half as much trouble to advertise their goods as do these other concerns? The largest catalogue house in existence has stopped all newspaper advertising. Because it doesn't pay? No, most assuredly not. Simply because there isn't a paper in the world with a large enough circulation to pay them to advertise. Their mailing list includes more names than any periodical has subscribers. It would be necessary for them to place their ads in so many newspapers to reach the few names they have not got on their lists, that it would be useless expenditure. When the newspapers of Olmsted county cannot carry advertising to enough names, not customers of any certain merchant in the city, to be a good investment for that merchant, he will have a good excuse to quit advertising. But that time will not come during this generation."

As to Parcels Post.

"The parcels post bill, if passed, would result in the ruination of many merchants. And farmers must remember that the things which vitally interest the merchants should be of interest to them. Take away the small cities and villages and the farmer would see the greatest calamity which was ever known to befall him. The interest of every merchant is inseparably connected with the welfare of every dealer with him. Not only the merchants but every person who owns property or must patronize a dealer should protest against this outrageous bill, called the parcels post. Do not wait until it is too late."

Don't Let It Come to This!



WHAT WILL HAPPEN WHEN THE MAIL ORDER HOUSE GETS THE CONSUMER COMPLETELY IN ITS POWER.

The Mail Order Question.

The Razoo publishes a cartoon in which the artist graphically depicts the result to the average small town if the consumer continues in increasing numbers to send his money to the big centers.

The small storekeeper will have to go out of business.

The small towns will "run down."

The farmer will not have the pleasure of hauling his grain to town over good roads, selling his grain, doing his shopping with his good friends and neighbors.

There won't be any town. Nor will there be any good roads.

"Live and let live" is a good motto and it suggests the query, "Does it pay to injure your town and your storekeeper who has honest goods to sell, which he is willing to show you before you buy?"

If, as is conceivable, the consumer is reduced to the necessity of doing all his buying of houses hundreds of miles away, will he not be at the mercy of those houses?

There is much common sense in this agitation against the mail order houses.

And it will pay you, Mr. Consumer, to ascertain before you send away again to the house in the big center to see if your own storekeeper can't supply your needs just as well and cheaply.

Think whether it won't pay you to help your own town. And reflect that if everything isn't exactly right, you won't have to go far to get it rectified if you buy of your own neighbor!

One of the finest, most beautiful and most sensible adjurations in the English language is this: Be neighborly!

Think, Mr. Merchant!

The Razoo is informed by a St. Paul jobber that the "Selling to Consumer" catalogue houses number among their customers one or more merchants or merchants' wives in every small town of the West.

This startling bit of information looks like a man handing another man a club with a request that it be used to beat the giver's head off.

The merchants who do this should have a think and logical thinking, in the premises, can have but one conclusion and point to but one action—that action being quit.—St. Paul Razoo.

Slim.

Binks was hurrying across the stallion yard, wrapped in thought and a heavy overcoat, when his contemplative mood was brought to a sudden termination by a cab almost running over him. Cabby pulled his horse up with a jerk, and gave his opinion in plain English about absent minded people.

"Couldn't you see the bloomin' 'oss?" he asked, with a withering glance.

"See it!" gasped Binks, looking contemptuously at the specimen between the shafts. Then he stepped on to the curb. "I didn't see your horse when I stood in front of him," said Binks, "but I can see something when I look ot him sideways."—London Tit Bits.

Would Be a Farmer.

United States Senator Pettus of Alabama, who is eighty-six years of age, when asked what vocation he would choose if he were again beginning active life, replied: "The high calling of a farmer. I would purchase a nicely located farm and settle down to farming as my lifework, thus guaranteeing to my loved ones and myself the highest and happiest of hours, with a full crib, a full smokehouse and a full measure of usefulness."

The Reason for It.

"Here's a story," said Mrs. Nagget, looking up from her paper, "of a man who begged for the judge to send him to jail in place of his wife—"

"Ha!" exclaimed Mr. Nagget, "and yet you say we men never sacrfice ourslves for—"

"Wait a minute. This woman stole some clothes she was given to wash. You see, she couldn't take in washing while she was in jail and so he would have had to work."

LITTLE MAN'S WOE.

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY THAT STIRRED THE HOTEL.

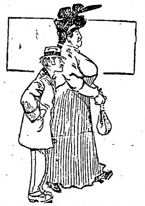
Proprietor and Guests Convinced a Murder Was Being Committed in Room 23—Triumph for Relentless Wife.

When they arrived at the hotel everybody turned to look at them. They were the most oddly assorted pair ever seen outside of a comic supplement. The lady towered above her husband several inches, and gazed down upon him over an expanse of bosom that, while ornamented, was not made less conspicuous by a huge diamond sunburst.

But while it was the wife who might have caught your first glance, it was the little man who held your attention. There was something so appealing in the glance he cast up at his wife, something so terrified in his white face and pale blue eyes. But in the eyes of the lady as she glowered down upon him there was nothing but relentless determination.

As he followed his wife into the elevator even the porter noticed that his nervousness had increased. His fingers were twitching and he kept moistening his lips, while he gazed up at his wife with a look of actual supplication. But the lady merely regarded him with withering scorn and unrelenting determination as the bellboy led the way to No. 23.

Ten minutes later from the large room in the south corridor, known as "twenty-three," there came a piercing shriek—the shriek of a man in agony. The elevator boy stopped his car suddenly and peered into the corridor with open mouth. Then another shriek rent the air and the voice of a man could be heard pleading piteously:



The Original Mr. and Mrs. Henpeck.

"Don't! Don't! Don't do it!" it cried.

For a moment there was silence. Then a woman's voice, low, severe, menacing, could just be heard by the listeners.

"Now, you fool," it said threateningly, "keep your mouth shut. Don't you dare scream or I'll—" but the rest was lost in the cries of agony that came from the victim.

"Stop! Stop! For God's sake stop! You're killing me! I tell you you're killing—" his voice died away in smothered moans.

By this time everybody in the house had gathered in the corridor that led to "23," and the hotel proprietor, with the house detective at his side, stood at the door to the awful room. The house detective pounded vigorously on the portal.

"Anything wrong in there?" he cried peremptorily.

At the sound of his voice the cries of the man ceased and the sound of a heavy body falling over a chair or a bed could be heard by those in the hall.

"What do you want?" asked the voice of the woman angrily. "Isn't this a private room? No, there's nothing the matter in here."

But the detective and the bystanders did not go away. They stood there open-eyed and open-mouthed looking at one another. For a moment there was an oppressive silence. Then like the wail of a soul in terror the shrieks of the man rose once more upon the air.

"Oh, Lord! Oh, mercy!"

With one accord the hotel proprietor and the house detective put their shoulders against the door. The frail paneling gave way at the first shove. The crowd of bellboys, waiters, guests, porters and clerks rushed into the room.

There, lying still and white on the white coverlet of the bed, his hands gripping the pillow in agony, stretched the form of the little man. His coat was off and just above his waist his back was bared. Standing over him, her lips closed in cold, pitiless determination, her face red with exertion, was the big and terrible woman. Between the thumb and forefinger of each hand she held the corner of a big brown porous plaster, which she was pulling violently from the little man's back. As the intruders reached her she gave the wrinkled rag a final jerk and the man gave a last faint shriek.

"There!" she exclaimed with satisfaction. "It's off."

Spankers.

EXPENSIVE ECONOMY.

To Save a Penny Sometimes Costs More Than a Pound.

I have seen a lady spoil a pair of fine gloves trying to rescue a nickel from a mud puddle. Several people have been run over by street cars or teams in New York while trying to rescue a dropped package, a hat, an umbrella or a cane.

A Paris bank clerk, who was carrying a bag of gold through the streets, dropped a ten franc piece, which rolled from the sidewalk. He set his bag down to look for the lost piece, and, while he was trying to extricate it from the gutter, some one stole his bag and ran away with it.

OLD SORES FED AND KEPT OPEN
BY IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

Whenever a sore refuses to heal it is because the blood is not pure and healthy, as it should be, but is infected with poisonous germs or some old blood taint which has corrupted and polluted the circulation. Those most usually afflicted with old sores are persons who have reached or passed middle life. The vitality of the blood and strength of the system have naturally begun to decline, and the poisonous germs which have accumulated because of a sluggish and inactive condition of the system, or some hereditary taint which has hitherto been held in check, now force an outlet on the face, arms, legs or other part of the body. The place grows red and angry, festers and eats into the surrounding tissue until it becomes a chronic and stubborn ulcer, fed and kept open by the impurities with which the blood is saturated. Nothing is more trying and disagreeable than a stubborn, non-healing sore. The very fact that it resists ordinary remedies and treatments is good reason for suspicion; the same germ-producing cancerous ulcers is back of every old sore, and especially is this true if the trouble is an inherited one. Washes, salves, nor indeed anything else, applied directly to the sore, can do any permanent good; neither will removing the sore with caustic plasters or the surgeon's knife make a lasting cure. If every particle of the diseased flesh were taken away another sore would come, because the trouble is in the blood, and the BLOOD CANNOT BE CUT AWAY. The cure must come by a thorough cleansing of the blood. In S. S. S. will be found a remedy for sores and ulcers of every kind. It is an unequalled blood purifier—one that goes directly into the circulation and promptly cleanses it of all poisons and taints. It gets down to the very bottom of the trouble and forces out every trace of impurity and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. changes the quality of the blood so that instead of feeding the diseased parts with impurities, it nourishes the irritated, inflamed flesh with healthy blood. Then the sore begins to heal, new flesh is formed, all pain and inflammation leaves, the place scabs over, and when S. S. S. has purified the blood the sore is permanently cured. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Write for our special book on sores and ulcers and any other medical advice you desire. We make no charge for the book or advice.

I was afflicted with a sore on my face of four years' standing. It was a small pimple at first but it gradually grew larger and worse in every way until I became alarmed about it and consulted several physicians. They all treated me but the sore continued to grow worse. I saw S. S. S. advertised and commenced its use and after taking it a while I was completely cured. My blood is now pure and healthy from the effect of S. S. S., and there has not been any sign of the sore since S. S. S. cured it.

High School Notes

[Edited bf Miss Ina Linnihan.]

Vacation is here, hurrah!

The Athenians rendered their program Friday last. Quite a few visitors were present.

Eli Noel visited school one afternoon last week.

Miss Hanson gave the pupils permission to whisper until school began Friday. This was so unusual that the pupils could hardly think of anything to say.

Orson Doe, a member of the class '06, visited the High School last week.

The editor of the Athenian Howler wrote up a clever farce for the paper bringing in most of the pupils' names in the High School as examples: Isabel, queen of the Algebra class; Columbus, Thomas the Major; Ethel furnishing the boardin' if Evelina would de lodge, etc.

It is always pleasant to be told, "you have done well," that is what Miss Hanson told us Friday in a short talk on our work of the first term.

A good many members of our alumni from out of town are with us again. Among them are Drew Marshall, Frank Brady, Margaret Kaus Iza Tibbets, Dollie Matthies, Abner Lulu and Ernest Fletcher, Ole Gerberg, Bill Ittner, Annie Suttor; Josephine Kaus, Maude Findeisen.

HAPPILY WEDDED

At St. Mary's church on Christmas day at 3 o'clock p. m., William J. Harlow and Miss Frances Orr were quietly married, Rev. Frther Ambrose officiating. It was a strictly private affair, only the close relatives and friends being present. Miss Maggie Orr acted as bridesmaid and Carl Schusser acted as best man. A wedding supper was participated in by the few who were present at the home of the bride's parents after which the happy couple drove to Plummer where they took the north bound Soo on a wedding trip.

FARMERS HAVE RIGHT.

Internal Revenue Commissioner Gives Information for Beeefit of Farmers.

In reply to the many inquiries concerning the manufacture of denatured alcohol by farmers, the commissioner of internal revenue has given out the following information:

"This office knows of no process by which alcohol can be manufactured except by distillation, and as 'regular distilleries' are the only kind recognized by the law, alcohol manufactured under the supervision of this department must be manufactured at regular distilleries. For your information, however, I will state that there is nothing mysterious or complicated about a 'regular' distillery, and that the manufacture of distilled spirits at 'regular distillery is probably simpler than the manufacture of cheese.

"The internal revenue laws under which all government distilleries are constructed and operated are necessarily full of detail, but at the same time these laws are so elastic and comprehensive that no honest man is barred from engaging in the business of manufacturing distilled spirits. There are absolutely no limitations as to the size of the distillery that can be operated under the law. There are over a thousand distilleries in operation now at each of which the daily producing capacity is less than thirty gallons. Many of these were set up on an outlay of less than $200. So far as the internal revenue laws are concerned either in theory or practice, the smallest and crudest distillery can produce alcohol if, as a business proposition, it is deemed advisable so to do.

"If a farmer or other person desires to go into the business of manufacturing denatured alcohol, at a plant however small, he will be required to construct his plant in the manner prescribed by the general laws and regulations. All of this will be done under governmental supervision, but the government pays for this supervision. The manufacturer of of alcohol does not bear one cent of it. There is no objection to a farmer manufacturing his alcohol in 'his back yard' provided he wants to establish a distillery there."

"Bad Roads; No Mail,"

Is the rule the government has adopted for the rural delivery service. Local authorities must keep the ways in passable condition if they are to benefit by the rural delivery, and so it comes about that this branch of the postal service is not only an agent of communication which brings farm lands nearer, but a direct incentive to road-building, and hence to general improvement and prosperity. Our rule is: Drink Golden Grain Belt Beer and save doctor bills. Its daily use will nourish and strengthen the entire body. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Catarrh of the nose and throa should lead you to at least ask us for free trial box of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. Nothing so surely proves merit as a real, actual test—and Dr. Shoop, to prove this, earnestly desires that we let you make that test. This creamy, Snow White healing balm, soothes the throat and nostrils, and quickly purifies a foul or feverish breath. Call and investigate. All druggists.

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others, coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Slippery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenuous and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents per box.

ASK SQUARE DEAL FOR FRISCO JAPS

PRESIDENT SENDS SPECIAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS ON THE SCHOOL PROBLEM.

SENDS IN METCALF'S REPORT

SAYS TREATY OBLIGATIONS DEMAND THAT WE AFFORD PROTECTION.

Washington, Dec. 20.—Calling especial attention to the last sentence of Secretary Metcalf's report on his investigation into the Japanese problem in San Francisco, a copy of which report he made the principal part of the document, President Roosevelt sent another special message to congress yesterday dealing with the Jap question. The sentence to which the president directs attention is:

Asks Square Deal.

"All considerations which may move a nation, every consideration of duty in the preservation of our treaty obligations, every consideration prompted by fifty years or more of close friendship with the empire of Japan, would unite in demanding, it seems to me, of the United States government and all its people the fullest protection and highest consideration for the subjects of Japan."

Secretary Metcalf's report is voluminous. It is a thorough review of the situation.

Fix an Age Limit.

To segregate the Japanese in one school would be unjust, he reports, for many would be compelled to journey far to attend a Japanese school, if but one were provided. To meet the cry of those who oppose the entrance of Japanese in the schools of the whites on the ground that adults would be entering the primary grades, Mr. Metter ing says it would be easy to pass a rule restricting the age of pupils who could enroll in certain grades.

Assaults and Boycotts.

Mr. Metcalf found many incidents of assaults on Japanese and boycotts against Japanese restaurants which brought protests from members of the race. The peace authorities assured him that every effort was made to protect the Orientals. Statements from Japanese indicate that the assaults were committed by young men, apparently without other cause than race prejudice.

Senate Passes Minor Bills.

The senate yesterday devoted nearly four hours to the consideration of unobjected bills on its calendar. The result was the passage of a number of measures of minor importance.

Indian Bill Passes.

The Indian appropriation bill was passed by the house practically as it came from the committee on Indian affairs.

HILL BEATEN BY HARRIMAN.

Control of St. Paul Assured to Union Pacific and Standard Oil.

Chicago, Dec. 20. — By one of the most effective coups ever executed in financial battles E. H. Harriman has defeated J. J. Hill in their fight for control of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. The Harriman-Standard Oil interests are now firmly in the saddle and have set about to strengthen their control.

Hill threw Harriman out of the ownership of the Northern Pacific by retiring the preferred stock, in which his opponent's control centered. Harriman and his friends maintain St. Paul by issuing two-thirds of a $100,000,000 stock increase to the holders of the preferred.

Quietly and almost unsuspected the Morgan-Hill people have been buying St. Paul in the hope of getting control and turning the Pacific extension southward into the Harriman territory. Yesterday the crucial point was reached.

From friends in the Harriman camp came the information that there would be a coup in the announcement of a stock issue of $100,000,000, which was $25,000,000 more than was expected at this time. Then the contest was given up; the stocks broke and weakened the market.

The official announcement betrayed the cunning of the Harriman people to make safe their management, to make sure the extension of the St. Paul into Hill territory.

May Strike for 1 Cent.

New York, Dec. 20.—The difference of 1 cent an hour between employes and managers may cause a strike here on five great railroad systems. The men affected are the 3,000 yard conductors, brakemen and other employes at the railroad terminals.

800,000 BALLOTS TO COUNT

VOTE FOR TRUSTEES OF THE BIG INSURANCE COMPANIES IS CAST.

New York, Dec. 20.—Probably never before in the history of the country has there been anything to compare with the election in this city yesterday of trustees for the New York Life Insurance company and the Mutual Life Insurance company.

In number of ballots cast and in the expenditure of time and money the election approached that of one of the states of the Union. Certainly no corporation or society election ever measured up to it in magnitude or interest.

The total vote cast in both companies will approximate 800,000, of which about 500,000 will be in the New York Life, in which the contest has been more vigorously and bitterly waged. It is expected that it will be some weeks before the votes are counted.

Both Sides Claim Victory.

Officials of both the New York Life and the Mutual companies declared last night that the administration tickets had without doubt been elected by large majorities.

The international policyholders' committee, through Samuel Untermeyer, its general counsel, expressed the conviction that the reform tickets would win in both companies, but by comparatively close margins.

Grand Jury Is Active.

While the ballots were being turned in at the companies' offices yesterday, the grand jury was investigating the affairs of the New York Life Insurance company brought before the legislative investigating committee. District Attorney Jerome examined several witnesses.

Indictments for forgery and probably for grand larceny may be handed down before the end of the month.

SUSSMAN IS FOUND GUILTY.

Murder in the Second Degree Is the Verdict of the Jury.

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 20. — The Hamburg-American line tourist steamer Prinzessin Victoria Luise, which went ashore off Port Royal during the night of Dec. 16, is a total wreck. The vessel is so close to shore that people can almost walk on board of her from the beach. She was keeeled heavily to starboard and it can be seen her bottom is badly damaged and that her boilers and engines are severely injured.

The German cruiser Bremen is still standing by the stranded steamer, and the steamer Virginia went to the scene of the wreck yesterday morning to assist in the salvage work if possible, but the latter returned here after seeing the condition of the Prinzessin Victoria Luise.

The body of Capt. Brunswig, commarder of the Prinzessin Victoria Luise, who killed himself in his cabin on board the steamer after she went ashore, was buried yesterday.

Minneapolis, Dec. 20.—Henry Sussman, charged with the murder of his wife in a hotel in this city, was convicted of murder in the second degree yesterday. The jury arrived at the verdict after deliberating all night. The verdict, under the statute, carries with it life imprisonment.

Sussman gave evidence of being under a great nervous strain, and when leaving the court room was heard to remark:

"This is a h— of a Christmas present to give a fellow."

Notwithstanding this expression, the opinion is that Sussman was relieved on hearing the verdict. Sussman will not be called for sentence until Saturday. His attorney will ask for a new trial.

LACK OF MILEAGE IS THE PROBLEM

RAILROAD OFFICIALS SAY THEY HAVE CARS, BUT LACK FACILITIES.

HILL ON THE WITNESS STAND

SAYS ROADS HAVE BEEN UNABLE TO KEEP UP WITH GROWTH OF COUNTRY.

Minneapolis, Dec. 21.—As a result of testimony drawn out from railroad witnesses at the final hearing before the interstate commerce commission, the car shortage as a thing actually existent is eliminated.

The traffic paralysis remains. It was shown that Northwestern lines have more rolling stock than ever before. It was shown that additional to ordinary equipment and new equipment the Great Northern and Northern Pacific roads are using nearly 10,000 cars belonging to other companies in excess of what they have lost to these lines, and still the crops have not been moved.

Hill on the Stand.

J. J. Hill was the principal witness yesterday. He said that the railroads of the United States are facing a very serious problem. In order to provide for handling the enormous traffic, which increased 110 per cent from 1895 to 1905, they should spend $1,100,000,000 a year for the next five years, a total of $5,500,000,000, and there is not that much money available in this country.

Mr. Hill's view of the present situation is that it is not a matter of car shortage, but a need of more mileage. He estimates the total additional mileage required in the United States at 73,333 miles.

Work Hampered.

The railroads have been making every effort to improve along the lines indicated by Mr. Hill, but they have not been able to go ahead on the scale necessary to keep up with the growth of the country. They have not had the money and they have not been able to get the labor. Even the work that they have appropriated money for has been hampered by lack of labor and inability to get material.

Opinion of Experts.

Several operating officials were on the witness stand yesterday. All claimed that there are plenty of cars. It was stated that double tracks and increased terminal facilities are the chief necessities in the Northwest. They all claimed that the roads were exerting every effort to handle the traffic in the best manner with the available facilities.

Shortage of Food Supplies.

Coupled with reports of fuel famine in the Northwest come reports of still another phase of suffering—a shortage of food supplies. Inadequate service has been interrupted by the cold and blizzards on the Western prairies, and now there are towns which are not only suffering from want of fuel, but even from the very necessities, in the lack of food.

SCORE KILLED ON STEAMER

ONE OF THE MOST DISASTROUS ACCIDENTS IN HISTORY OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Vicksburg, Miss., Dec. 21. — One of the most disastrous accidents in the history of the Mississippi river occurred yesterday when the steamer W. T. Scovill blew up. Many negroes were on board, but it is impossible to ascertain the exact number of dead and injured. Officers of the boat state that not less than ten or more than sixteen were killed. They say a like number were injured.

The number of dead and injured negroes cannot be stated, but of a crew and passenger list of about fifty, about half are missing.

The accident occurred at Gold Dust landing, about seventeen miles south of this city. The boat was taking on freight, when suddenly it was blown to atoms. Many of the timbers were thrown hundreds of yards and the boat was so badly damaged that she began to sink immediately. It is said that the accident was caused by a defective boiler plate.

THE PANAMA CANAL

President's Message to Congress Predicts Complete Success of the Scheme.

Denounces Unpatriotic Slanderers and Praises Work of Diggers.

Washington, Dec. 17.—President Roosevelt sent three messages to congress today, dealing respectively with the Panama canal, the public land laws and the personnel of the navy.

On the Land Laws.

In his message on the public lands the president urges the repeal of the timber and stone act, demands the radical amendment of the desert land act; urges the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead act, all of which he declares now serve to turn great tracts of land over to speculators and corporations.

To prevent the fraudulent acquisition of the public lands, the president says he has directed the secretary of the interior to allow no patent to be issued to public lands under any law until, by an examination on the ground, actual compliance with that law has been found to exist. For this purpose an increase of special agents in the general land office is urgently required. The president believes that there should be provision for leasing coal, oil and gas rights under proper restrictions.

Transfers of the national parks from the charge of the secretary of the interior to the secretary of agriculture is recommended.

The power to create national forests by proclamation should be extended to Indian lands, the Indians to be paid the full value of land thus taken.

Navy Personnel Bill.

The president earnestly recommends early consideration of the naval personnel bill, saying that, should it be enacted into law, it will cause officers on the sea-going list to reach the grade of captain at forty-eight and rear admirals at fifty-five, and will assure their serving seven years in the grade of captain and seven years in the grade of rear admiral, thus enabling them to become thoroughly skillful and efficient in these grades. The bill also establishes the grade of vice admiral. On occasions of official importance, of international council, or of combined naval action, the interests of this great nation demand that our naval representatives shall rank as the equal of the naval representatives of other powers.

The president says that if the proposed plan of promotion is carried out it will, as compared with existing laws, make a saving of more than $5,000,000 during the next seven years.

The principal part of this saving is made by stopping the voluntary retirement of young lieutenant commanders with the rank and pay of commanders upon the retired list.

The president is firmly of the opinion that unless the present condition of the higher commissioned personnel is rectified by judicious legislation the future of the navy will be gravely compromised.

The Panama Canal.

In the month of November I visited the Isthmus of Panama, going over the canal zone with considerable care; and also visited the cities of Panama and Colon, which are not in the zone or under the United States flag, but as to which the United States government, through its agents, exercises control for certain sanitary purposes.

I chose the month of November for my visit partly because it is the rainiest month of the year, the month in which the work goes forward at the greatest disadvantage, and one of the two months which the medical department of the French canal commissionenfw ulswstlike French canal company found most unhealthy.

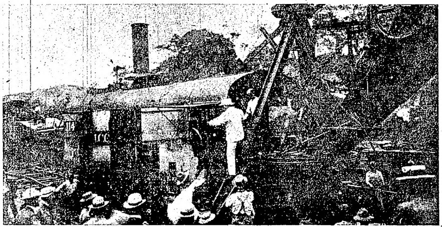
At the outset I wish to pay a tribute to the amount of work done by the French Canal company under very difficult circumstances. Many of the buildings they put up were excellent and are still in use, though, naturally, the houses are now getting out of repair and are being used as dwellings only until other houses can be built, and much of the work they did in the Culebra cut, and some of the work they did in digging has been of direct and real benefit. This country has never made a better investment than the $40,000,000 which it paid to the French company for work and betterments, including especially the Panama railroad.

An inspection on the ground at the height of the rainy season served to convince me of the wisdom of congress in refusing to adopt either a high-level or a sea-level canal. There seems to be a universal agreement among all people competent to judge that the Panama route, the one actually chosen, is much superior to both the Nicaragua and Darien routes.

Our people found on the isthmus a certain amount of old French material and equipment which could be used. Some of it, in addition, could be sold as scrap iron. Some could be used for furnishing the foundation for filling in. For much no possible use could be devised that would not cost more than it would bring in.

Work of Construction.

The work is now going on with a vigor and efficiency pleasant to witness. The three big problems of the canal are the La Boca dams, the Gatun dam, and the Culebra cut. The Culebra cut must be made, anyhow; but of course changes as to the dams, or at least as to the locks adjacent to the dams, may still occur. The La Boca dams offer no particular problem, the bottom material being so good that there is a practical certainty, not merely as to what can be achieved, but as to the time of achievement. The Gatun dam offers the most serious problem which we have to solve; and yet the ablest men on the isthmus believe that this problem is certain of solution along the lines proposed; although, of course, it necessitates great toil, energy, and intelligence, and although equally, of course, there will be some little risk in connection with the work. If the huge earth dam now contemplated is thrown across from one foothill to the other we will have what is practically a low, broad, mountain ridge behind which will rise the inland lake. This artificial mountain will probably show less seepage, that is, will have greater restraining capacity, than the average natural mountain range. The exact locality of the locks at this dam—as at the other dams—is now being determined. In April next Secretary Taft, with three of the ablest engineers of the country—Messrs. Noble, Stearns, and Ripley—will visit the isthmus, and the three engineers will make the final and conclusive examinations as to the exact site for each lock. Meanwhile the work is going ahead without a break.



PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT INSPECTING STEAM SHOVEL NEAR ENTRANCE TO CULEBRA CUT.

COLON, FRONT STREET,

Showing complete pavement from Panama railroad station.

In Culebra Cut.

The Culebra cut does not offer such great risks; that is, the damage liable to occur from occasional land slips will not represent what may be called major disasters. The work will merely call for intelligence, perseverance and executive capacity. It is, however, the work upon which most labor will have to be spent. The dams will be composed of the earth taken out of the cut and very possibly the building of the locks and dams will take even longer than the cutting in Culebra itself.

The main work is now being done in the Culebra cut. It was striking and impressive to see the huge steam shovels in full play, the dumping trains carrying away the rock and earth they dislodged. The implements of French excavating machinery, which often stand a little way from the line of work, though of excellent construction, look like the veriest toys when compared with these new steam shovels, just as the French dumping cars seem like toy cars when compared with the long trains of huge cars, dumped by steam plows, which are now in use. This represents the enormous advance that has been made in machinery during the past quarter of a century. No doubt a quarter of a century hence this new machinery, of which we are now so proud, will similarly seem out of date, but it is certainly serving its purpose well now. The old French cars had to be entirely discarded.

New Records for Excavation.

As soon as the type of canal was decided this work began in good earnest. The rainy season will shortly be over and then there will be an immense increase in the amount taken out; but even during the last three months, in the rainy season, steady progress is shown by the figures: In August, 242,000 cubic yards; in September, 291,000 cubic yards, and in October, 325,000 cubic yards. In October new records were established for the output of individual shovels as well as for the tonnage haul of individual locomotives. I hope to see the growth of a healthy spirit of emulation between the different shovel and locomotive crews, just such a spirit as has grown on our battle ships between the different gun crews in matters of marksmanship. Passing through the cut the amount of new work can be seen at a glance. In one place the entire side of a hill had been taken out recently by twenty-seven tons of dynamite, which were exploded at one blast. At another place I was given a presidential salute of twenty-one charges of dynamite. On the top notch of Culebra cut the prism is now as wide as it will be; all told, the canal bed at this point has now been sunk about 200 feet below what it originally was. It will have to be sunk about 130 feet farther. Throughout the cut the drilling, blasting, shoveling and hauling are going on with constantly increasing energy, the huge shovels being pressed up, as if they were mountain howitzers, into the most unlikely looking places, where they eat their way into the hillsides.

Critics and Doubting Thomases.

It is not only natural, but inevitable, that a work as gigantic as this which has been undertaken on the isthmus should arouse every species of hostility and criticism. The conditions are so new and so trying, and the work so vast, that it would be absolutely out of the question that mistakes should not be made. Checks will occur. Unforeseen difficulties will arise. From time to time seemingly well settled plans will have to be changed. At present 25,000 men are engaged on the task. After a while the number will be doubled. In such a multitude it is inevitable that there should be here and there a scoundrel. Very many of the poorer class of laborers lack the mental development to protect themselves against either the rascality of others or their own folly, and it is not possible for human wisdom to devise a plan by which they can invariably be protected. In a place which has been for ages a byword for unhealthfulness, and with so large a congregation of strangers suddenly put down and set to hard work there will now and then be outbreaks of disease. There will now and then be shortcomings in administration; there will be unlooked-for accidents to delay the excavation of the cut or the building of the dams and locks.

I have investigated every complaint brought to me for which there seemed to be any shadow of foundation. In two or three cases, all of which I have indicated in the course of this message, I came to the conclusion that there was foundation for the complaint, and that the methods of the commission in the respect complained of could be bettered. In the other instances the complaints proved absolutely baseless, save in two or three instances where they referred to mistakes which the commission had already found out and corrected.

Slanderers and Libelers.

So much for honest criticism. There remains an immense amount of as reckless slander as has ever been published. Where the slanderers are of foreign origin I have no concern with them. Where they are Americans, I feel for them the heartiest contempt and indignation; because, in a spirit of wanton dishonesty and malice they are trying to interfere with, and hamper the execution of, the greatest work of the kind ever attempted; and are seeking to bring to naught the efforts of their countrymen to put to the credit of America one of the giant feats of the ages. The outrageous accusations of these slanderers constitute a gross libel upon a body of public servants who, for trained intelligence, expert ability, high character and devotion to duty, have never been excelled anywhere. There is not a man among those directing the work on the isthmus who has obtained his position on any other basis than merit alone, and not one who has used his position in any way for his own personal or pecuniary advantage.

Plan to Build by Contract.

After most careful consideration we have decided to let out most of the work by contract, if we can come to satisfactory terms with the contractors. The whole work is of a kind suited to the peculiar genius of our people; and our people have developed the type of contractor best fitted to grapple with it. It is of course much better to do the work in large part by contract than to do it all by the government, provided it is possible on the one hand to secure to the contractor a sufficient remuneration to make it worth while for responsible contractors of the best kind to undertake the work; and provided on the other hand it can be done on terms which will not give an excessive profit to the contractor at the expense of the government. After much consideration the plan already promulgated by the secretary of war was adopted. This plan in its essential features was drafted, after careful and thorough study and consideration, by the chief engineer, Mr. Stevens, who, while in the employment of Mr. Hill, the president of the Great Northern railroad, had personal experience of this very type of contract.

A seven-headed commission is of course a clumsy executive instrument. We should have but one commissioner, with such heads of departments and other officers under him as we may find necessary. We should be expressly permitted to employ the best engineers in the country as consulting engineers.

I accompany this paper with a map showing substantially what the canal will be like when it is finished. When the Culebra cut has been made and the dams built (if they are built as at present proposed) there will then be at both the Pacific and Atlantic ends of the canal two great fresh-water lakes, connected by a broad channel running at the bottom of a ravine, across the backbone of the Western hemisphere. Those best informed believe that the work will be completed in about eight years; but it is never safe to prophesy about such a work as this, especially in the tropics.

Confident of Ultimate Success.

Of the success of the enterprise I am as well convinced as one can be of any enterprise that is human. It is a stupendous work upon which our fellow-countrymen are engaged down there on the isthmus, and while we should hold them to a strict accountability for the way in which they perform it, we should yet recognize, with frank generosity, the epic nature of the task on which they are engaged and its world-wide importance. They are doing something which will redound immeasurably to the credit of America, which will benefit all the world, and which will last for ages to come. Under Mr. Shonts and Mr. Stevens and Dr. Gorgas this work has started with every omen of good fortune. They and their worthy associates, from the highest to the lowest, are entitled to the same credit that we would give to the picked men of a victorious army; for this conquest of peace will, in its great and far-reaching effect, stand as among the very greatest conquests, whether of peace or of war, which have ever been won by any of the peoples of mankind. A badge is to be given to every American citizen who for a specified time has taken part in this work; for participation in it will hereafter be held to reflect honor upon the man participating just as it reflects honor upon a soldier to have belonged to a mighty army in a great war for righteousness. Our fellow-countrymen on the isthmus are working for our interest and for the national renown in the same spirit and with the same efficiency that the men of the army and navy work in time of war. It behooves us in our turn to do all we can to hold up their hands and to aid them in every way to bring their great work to a triumphant conclusion. —Theodore Roosevelt.

FISH AT POULTRY SHOW.

Plans Already Taking Shape for Annual Exhibit.

The Minnesota State Poultry association will hold its twenty-first annual exhibition in Minneapolis Jan. 15 to 23, inclusive. Secretary George A. Loth and the other officers are making preparations for a larger show than last year's.

Besides the regular poultry exhibit a big collection of pheasants, water fowl, etc., will be brought from Oak Park, Ill. The fish exhibit from the state hatchery will also be shown as an educational feature.

The association has provided the finest cooping system in America and every bird will be penned by itself. Coops are of finest hard wood, finished in oil. These will be occupied by birds from all parts of the world. To induce breeders to assist in making this the banner year the association offers liberal cash prizes, as well as eight silver cups, as special premiums donated by the business men of the Twin Cities.

Eggs and dressed poultry are to occupy a prominent position and to encourage this department no entry fee will be charged.

A pigeon department will be conducted by Fred May, Minneapolis. W. A. Wales, Iowa City, Iowa, a fancier of pigeons, will act as judge.

The poultry judges are: Sharp Butterfield, London, Ont.; James Tucker, Concord, Mich.; W. A. Wales, Iowa City, Iowa; D. E. Hale, Windom, Minn.

The sixth annual cat show of the National Cat club is to be held within the next month and if satisfactory arrangements can be made the two will be held in conjunction.

SNUG SUM PAID TO THE STATE.

St. Paul Road and a Payment Due for Earnings Hitherto Unaccounted.

Through the activity of Public Examiner Kerst's department, officials of the St. Paul road agreed to pay into the state treasury $26,291.77, covering unreported gross earnings.

The earnings in dispute amounted to $855,855.92.

The tax certified against the company by Mr. Kerst is the largest to be recovered in years by reason of discrepancies in the annual reports made by the railroads. It dates from the year 1899 to 1905, and represented an examination of the company's books in Chicago covering a period of nearly three months. This examination was made by E. W. McGrew of the department.

The money which this particular road failed to report was that expended to secure additional state traffic, donations to promote new industries and mileage given for newspaper advertising. This money had been covered up through a system of intricate bookkeeping, and was not reported in the annual statement.

The St. Paul demurred at first to the investigation, but later consented and agreed to the payment of the lawful tax.

Other roads doing business in the state, Mr. Kerst says, are to be similarly investigated.

It is expected that the state treasury will be enriched $200,000 or more.

ROAD AMENDMENT SHORT.

Total Vote Is Increased by Corrections, so Amendment Lacks 135.

Corrected returns on the total vote of the state and the constitutional amendments show that the good roads amendment is 135 votes short of a majority, so it will doubtless be declared lost by the state canvassing board, which will meet soon. The total vote of the state stands at 284,008, and the road amendment got only 141,870 votes. It would have to receive 142,005 votes in order to carry.

It remains to be seen whether the enemies of the tax amendment will institute a contest to determine whether it was the tax amendment that lost. Attorneys for some of the interested parties have been watching the vote with a view to making a contest if there was any show to win. It is evident that they could hardly succeed in switching all the votes from one amendment to the other. If they changed any large part of the votes it would reduce the tax amendment's big majority and probably pull the road amendment through by a small margin.

Itasca county's return made no report of the total vote cast, and five precincts did not report it to the county board. The precinct returns, all but the five, have been footed in the office of the secretary of state, and show 3,153 votes. It happens that the five other precincts made no report of the vote on the amendments, so the two omissions probably offset each other.

NORTHERN PACIFIC TIES GONE.

10,000 Are Quietly "Withdrawn," in the Words of Mark Twain.

Sensational charges are made against persons residing in the eastern part of Clay county, in the vicinity of Muskoda and Hawley. According to Justice Herring of Hawley, 10,000 railroad ties belonging to the Northern Pacific have disappeared. The justice issued search warrants and some of the missing ties were found.

The company has been missing timber for several months and an investigation resulted in the startling discovery that it was short 10,000 ties, which it had laid down for improvement work near Hawley and Muskoda. The missing ties are valued at $4,000. Further developments may be looked for in a day or two.

CREAM TEST IS NOT FAIR ONE.

The Method Now Employed Puts a Premium on Inferiority.

When the legislators meet next month it is probable that they will be asked to change the manner of testing milk and cream in order that full justice may be done to the dairyman whose milk and cream is richer and contains a greater percentage of butter fat than does the average product. Under the present law, it is claimed, this is not done.

The objections to the tests under the existing law are made by some of the dairymen supplying cream to the creameries. The objections are based on the assertion that while the test is fair and just so far as most of the cream is concerned, it is not so to the dairyman who by buying the very best cows and using the most scientific methods in caring for them, is enabled to supply milk and cream of greater richness than can be produced with inferior cattle and methods.

The method suggested for remedying the defects in the present law is that of applying the test of weight instead of measure, as is now done. It is claimed that the only fair way to determine the amount of butter fat in cream is to apply the test to a certain weight instead of measure of the fluid.

In testing cream it is drawn into a glass vessel holding eighteen cubic centimeters. This measure is taken as the standard and is supposed to hold eighteen grams of cream. Acting on this theory, all cream is tested in quantities sufficient to fill the vessel, the cream being taken from this vessel and put into the test tube. After it is placed in the test tube a like quantity of sulphuric acid is poured into the tube, and it is then revolved at the rate of about 1,000 times a minute for five minutes in a device especially made for this purpose. The sulphuric acid is addded for the purpose of eating away the cheese part of the cream and the curd which surrounds the globules of butter fat. Hot water is then added and the test tube again revolved in the machine about one minute. This causes the butter fat to become separated from the rest of the contents and it rises to the top. The top of the tube has a scale from which the percentage of butter fat in the vessel is determined.

The method by which the amount of butter fat in the cream is arrived at is satisfactory to all concerned, except as to the first part of the process, which designates eighteen cubic centimeters as the standard from which the percentage is to be ascertained. Experiments made by the state dairy and food department show that this standard is a proper one with cream of the average richness, but it is admitted that where the cream is richer than the average the test is not fair. Experiments have shown that the cream contained in the eighteen cubic centimeter vessel varies in weight, and as the butter fat is the lightest element, it follows that this vessel filled with the richest cream contains less butter fat than does the poorer cream, and the percentage of butter fat shown in the test works a hardship upon the man who supplies the richest cream. While the test shows that the percentage of butter fat in eighteen grams of the less rich cream, it really shows the percentage of butter fat in a less weight of the richer cream, perhaps seventeen grams, and he loses the difference due to this difference in weight.

To remedy this fault it is now proposed that instead of using the capacity of a vessel as the standard for the tests, a certain weight be taken as the standard. By this means only, it is argued, can the true relative value of the various lots of cream be ascertained with fairness to all. The farmer is paid for the amount of butter fat shown by the tests to be contained in his milk or cream, the number of gallons being no element in the transaction. If the weight standard is adopted, it is claimed, the producer of the richer cream will receive the full advantage of the superiority of his product, which is not now the case.

This matter has been given considerable attention by the state dairy and food experts, and it is probable that in his annual report Commissioner Slater will recommend legislation looking toward the adoption of the new method of testing cream. This question, however, does not concern the man who buys milk and cream for consumption in his home, for he buys it by the pint or quart, and the law requires that all cream offered for sale to the public must contain at least 20 per cent of butter fat. If it runs over that amount the consumer gets richer cream, but it costs him no more, because it is sold by the measure. It is the farmer who keeps a number of cows and supplies the creameries who is interested in this matter and in whose interest the legislature will act if it does act.

STATE FAIR ANNUAL.

Agricultural Society Issues Call for Meeting.

The official announcement of the annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural society has been made by E. W. Randall, secretary, who calls attention to the provision for the choice of delegates made by the state law organizing the society.

Representation of the society is from local agricultural organizations throughout the state, or in counties where such organizations do not exist by appointment by the county commissioners. Delegates are also permitted from societies in any way connected with the promotion of agriculture, so that the society is made up of men definitely interested in agricultural pursuits.

"Weren't you afraid, father?" asked Mrs. Hobbs, in a quivering voice.

"No, indeed, why should I be?" inquired Mr. Hobbs, inflating his chest.

"'Aha, did you?' said I. 'Now tell me—do you think Hamlet was mad?'

A GIGANTIC GAMBLE.

Every Step of the Pearl Fishery Attended by Fickle Fortune.

The world's most gigantic gamble, pregnantly fruitful with chance in all variations and shadings, is unquestionably the Ceylon pearl fishery. Compared with it any state lottery pales to insignificance. From the taking of the first oyster to the draining of the last vatful of "matter" every step is attended by fickle fortune, and never is the interest of the people of Portugal or of Mexico keener over a drawing of a lottery, the tickets of which may have been sold at the very thresholds of the cathedrals, than is that of the natives of Ceylon and southern India over the daily results of a Manar fishery.

Each bivalve is a lottery ticket. It may contain a gem worthy of place in a monarch's crown or be a seed pearl with a mercantile value of only a few rupees. Perhaps one oyster in a hundred contains a pearl, and not more than one pearl in a hundred, be it known, has a value of importance. Nature furnishes the sea, pearling banks, oysters and all therein contained. The Ceylon administration conducts the undertaking and for its trouble and trifling outlay exacts a "rake-off" of two-thirds of all that may be won from the deep. And mere man, the brown or black diver, receives for his daring and enterprise one oyster in every three that he brings from the ocean's depths, and his earnings must be shared with boat owner, sailors, attendants and assistants almost without number.

For size of "rake-off" there is no game of hazard in the world offering a parallel. The Ceylon government used to exact three out of every four oysters brought in, the current tribute of two out of three having become operative only a few years since.—Frederic C. Penfield in Century.

THE MANTO.

A Garment That All Chilean Women Wear to Church.

The Chilean women's most fetching garment, wrap, or what you will, is the manto. It is of some kind of fine black material and is worn thrown over the head. Sometimes a flap of it is drawn tightly across the forehead. After being thrown over the head the manto, by some means which I have as yet been unable to discern, is cinched in close about the neck.

This cinching in at the neck makes a kind of hood around the face, and this hood is very skillfully manipulated by some of the women to cover up moles and other defects and to conceal the fact that their hair has not been carefully combed.

From the shoulders the manto falls down in front to the toes and behind to the heels. It is held together in front partly by pins and partly by the hands of the wearer. It is usually, but not always, worn over the street costume.

The wearing of mantos by all women, no matter of what class, on attending church is obligatory. This providing for a uniform costume is quite reasonable and is designed to eliminate such things as our Easter bonnet competitions and allow the mind to forsake earthly and devote itself to things spiritual.

It also swells the attendance on many occasions, for some of the ladies, when they arise too late to have time to dress for early morning mass, merely throw on their mantos over their robes de nuit and, with the addition of such head and foot trimming as is necessary to give the impression of being fully dressed, trip demurely off to church, to all outward seeming as though they had spent hours instead of minutes before their glasses.—Los Angeles Times.

Greek Burial Custom.

It is the custom in certain parts of Greece to carry bodies to the grave in coffins which allow the face to be visible. The fashion is said to have originated when the Turks dominated the land. At that time arms and ammunition were being constantly distributed to the Greek populace in a way which baffled the Turkish officials until a coffin which was being escorted by an apparently mourning procession was found to contain not a body, but weapons. An order was then promulgated that bodies were to be borne to the grave only on open litters or in coffins without lids.

Old Times In New York.

In 1789 New York city maintained an official who would whip a servant, either free or slave, for the master, charging a shilling for the job. Petty thieves were branded for life with a "T" on the cheek. Mrs. Johanna Young and another woman convicted of grand larceny were driven all over the city in an open cart, then stripped to the waist and given thirty-nine lashes apiece in public and then banished. "Whereupon," says the record, "they went to Philadelphia."

The Tender Hearted Butcher.

HOME POSTAL CARDS.

Post cards can be made at home after March 1, 1907, when a recent order of the postal department removing nearly every restriction now placed upon the issuance of post cards will go into effect, says the Minneapolis Journal. It will also be permissable to paste photographs, newspaper clippings and other imprints on this paper upon upon the cards. The left half of the address side of the card will be available for messages or pictures, and it will not be necessary to print the words "post card" or "postal card" upon the card. The only remaining restriction is that the cards must be of standard weight pasteboard and not more than 3 9-16 by 5 9-16 inches or less than 2 15-16 by 4 5-8 inches in dimension. Leather and other freak materials are barred.

A Widow's Double Grief.

A clergyman who recently called upon a young widow to condole with her upon the loss of her husband placed considerable emphasis upon the proposition that the separation was merely temporal and painted in vivid colors the happiness of friends reunited after death. When he stopped for breath the sorrowing one heaved a deep sigh and quietly remarked, "Well, I suppose his first wife has got him again then."—Saturday Review.

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XXIV.—(Continued.)

"That's true," said Belle, and Billery assenting, they made preparation for departure by the next homeward train. This necessitated a somewhat hurried toilette for the ladies, but they were ready in time. The journey was made in silence for the most part, and in a complete silence they walked from the village station. It happened that Aloysius was standing at the window which looked out upon the pathway, and seeing Lilian in the act of entering he ran to encounter her upon the threshold. He met her with his customary smile of melancholy and affection.

"Welcome, and twice welcome. What beneficent wind has blown you here?"

"A benficent wind, indeed," she answered, with a proud and confident smile. "Mr. and Mrs. Billery are known to you already. Will you give us three a few minutes of your time?"

"Willingly," he answered. "Come in."

He shook hands courteously and no more, but Belle retained his hand with a firm grasp.

"I'd like ye to know, Mr. Brangwyn, that I come here as a friend, and that I withdraw every uncivil word I ever said to ye. Ye have me apologies, Mr. Brangwyn, and I hope ye'll not throw them back at me, though ye have the right to do it."

"It would be a grave offense indeed," he answered, cordially, "which would not be wiped out by so candid and kind an appeal, Mrs. Billery. I am very pleased to see you under my roof."

"I have tried to make my amends already, sir," said Billery. "Miss Lee will explain the reason for my intrusion."

"I told you that a beneficent wind had blown me here," said Lilian. "It is a wind to raise the cloud which has rested over you so long and scatter it to all the other winds of heaven. Aloysius, dear friend"—she laid both hands upon his shoulders and looked up into his eyes—"there is one sharp trial before you and then the thing is over. You will be arrested to-morrow for the murder of your uncle."

"Ah!" he sighed as Billery had once heard him sigh before. "At last! At last! I have dreaded this for many years, and since the day I first entered this house I have known that it was certain. I have prayed that it might be averted, and I take heaven to witness that I have suffered in striving to avert it. Well, the truth must out and guilt must suffer."

"Mr. Billery tells me that you have an incontestable proof of your own innocence," said Lilian.

"That is true," he answered. "But I am at a loss to know how Mr. Billery became aware of the fact."

"I had it from Alexis, who told me that he himself had seen it."

"Ah!" he sighed again. "I understand. But tell me, now, how comes it you are aware that the police will take action to-morrow? They are not in the habit of publishing a fact like that."

Thereupon Billery told the story of his association with Sergeant Holt, and of their encounter in Paris on the previous day.

"I told him that he would make the error of his lifetime," he continued, "and that I should feel it my duty to see that he did not find you unprepared. He said that I was quite free to tell you, and that you were under surveillance.

"I have been aware of that. Might I trouble you so far, Mr. Billery, as to ask you to walk into the road, and to see if there is a man in sight who wears a light drab overcoat, a brown bowler hat, and a wisp of a dirty red comforter?"

"If he is there?" asked Billery.

"Tell him, please, to hold himself in readiness to accompany me to Scotland Yard."

"Right!" said the other, and was gone upon the instant.

"You are going to clear yourself?" cried Lilian.

"I am going to clear myself," he responded. "But, my dearest, I shall strike a blow in doing it at the heart of one I would fain shelter from all harm. I kept silent at first because I had no more than a strong suspicion. I have kept silent since for the sake of that dear friend. For that friend I would die right willingly, but I cannot consent to die ignominiously, and to leave the name of a murderer behind me."

"Billery was back again.

"I found the fellow almost at the gate. I gave him your message, and I never saw a man so utterly flabbergasted in my life. 'He's going to give himself up?' he said. 'No,' I said, 'I have brought him news from Sergeant Holt, whom I left yesterday in Paris, that he's to be arrested to-morrow.' I gave my card and with that he recognised me. He says he can't let you go unless he travels in the same carriage."

"He's welcome to do that. I should like you all to come with me. The ladies can travel in another compartment, but you and I, Mr. Billery, can fumigate the fellow with a good Havana. You smoke I know. Excuse me whilst I dress for out of doors."

"Well," said Billery, "it looks as if we were drawing near the end."

CHAPTER XXV.

Aloysius paused at the village post-office and dispatched a telegram. It was addressed to Alexis, and it ran thus: "Am threatened with immediate arrest on charge of murder. Reporting myself at Scotland Yard." This done, to the great mystification of Billery, to whom Aloysius showed the message, the whole party proceeded to the railway station. The train arriving in due time, the whole party traveled on to London, the ladies journeying in one compartment and the men in another.

Aloysius was immersed in a sad tranquility, and from the beginning to the end of the transit did not break silence by a word. He certainly looked very unlike a man who was to be charged with murder, and still more unlike one who has been made aware of a fact so discomposing. He sat smoking, with his mournful eyes apparently fixed on vacancy. At Victoria he made no objection to riding in the same hansom with the man who had him under observation. Billery chartered a four-wheeler for his wife and Lilian and himself, and in a little while they all found themselves in an officially-furnished reception room at the great detective center. Aloysius sent in his card to the gentleman whom he knew to have been in charge of the case from the first. He was almost immediately received.

"To what do I owe this visit, Mr. Brangwyn?" he asked. He was a man who had served his country in the field, and was reputed an iron disciplinarian. He looked about as emotional as a bronze statue as he sat there behind his eyeglasses, with his steel gray eyes, his close-cropped, snow-white hair, his eagle beak, and great gray mustache.

"I am very credibly informed," Aloysius answered, "that I am to be arrested to-morrow on a charge of wilful murder. I presume that I shall not be regarded as impertinent if I ask you whether you have any official knowledge of the matter?"

"I can tell you no more than this," said the official, coolly paring his nails with a pocket-knife. "You are at present under observation. Inquiries are at this moment being made in Paris. Should those inquiries have the result we expect from them, you will be arrested on the return of the agent to whom we have entrusted them."

"Thank you," said Aloysius. "I have evidence in my possession which will compel you to release me on that charge. This accusation has been hanging over me for many years and I have long known myself liable to arrest. I have taken such precautions as I could against even a momentary detention, and I have placed my proofs in the safe keeping of the Credit Lyonnais at Nice. I shall ask you in the first place to dispatch at my cost a telegram asking that the small safe containing my documents shall at once be sent to you. That is the key to it, and I shall ask leave to place it in your charge. I am quite willing to submit to any precaution you may feel it necessary to take to frustrate an attempt at escape, but I hope you will not feel that my arrest is one of them."

"What is the nature of the documents?" asked the official.

"They are nine in number," he replied. "The one of most importance contains a statement of the circumstances of the crime, the motives which inspired it, and the means adopted to conceal it. It is in the handwriting of the criminal himself, and can be identefied by scores of people now in London."

"I suppose you know the consequences of that statement, Mr. Brangwyn?" said the other, carefully inspecting his nails, and returning to his work upon them.

"Quite accurately," Aloysius answered. "I lay myself open to indictment as an accessory after the fact. I do not expect to be vindictively dealt with when the circumstances of the case are known."

"You had better write your telegram," said the official. "The materials are before you."

Aloysius seated himself and wrote: "Send by grande vitesse the small safe confided to you by me 27th September last to Chief Commissioner of Police, Scotland Yard, London.

"Aloysius Brangwyn."

He passed the paper across the table and the official accepted it and read it carefully.

"Are you prepared," he asked, "to divulge the name of the person whom you charge with the murder of your uncle?"

"I am not prepared to make a charge at this moment which I cannot substantiate until my documents arrive."

"Very well. Your appearance here, of course, argues bona fides. I see no purpose to be served by your arrest. But you must understand that you will be kept under the strictest surveillance until the existence of these documents of yours is proved and they have been examined."

"I thank you. I shall place no obstacle in your way."

"Looking to the gravity of the case, I shall have to place you under an efficient guard, Mr. Brangwin. You will have to receive two of our men at home. You shall be compromised as little as possible, and I will send a pair of gentlemanly fellows."

"Thank you. You are very kind. May I assume that I am not debarred from the private society of my friends?"

"I see no necessity for that. But you ought to understand that if you can clear yourself by implicating yourself as an accesory, you will stand in almost as much peril as you do at this moment. You are out of the fire, but you have only escaped to the frying-pan. I hope, for your own sake, that you will be able to make a good case. Good day."

Thus dismissed, the visitor arose, made his adieux with the quiet distinction and self-control which had marked his manner all along, and withdrew to his own party.

"I am not to be arrested," he announced, "but I am under strict observation until I can present my proofs. There will be trouble on other grounds later on, but we can serve no purpose by anticipating it. I should like a private word with you Mr. Billery, if you will be so good." The two withdrew into a window recess together. "I am so placed that it is impossible for me to ascertain personally how my cousin Alexis has acted on the intelligence I wired to him this morning. I cannot even have it known that I have caused an inquiry to be made. But you, I believe, are on terms of sufficient intimacy with him to make a casual call."

"Oh, yes," said Billery. "We've been comrades more or less ever since I can remember—ever since he can remember, which comes practically to the same thing. Shall I look him up for you?"

"It would relieve me a good deal to know what he proposes," said Aloysius. "You need not name me."

"Good!" said Billery. "I'll go. Is there any objection to my taking my wife with me?"

"Possibly," Aloysius answered, with a singular gravity, "you had better not do that. It might be inadvisable." There seemed to be a weight of meaning hidden by his words.

"Very well," said Billery, much bepuzzled, but very anxious to be of use. "I'll just explain to her and be off." He crossed over to where Belle and Lilian sat together. "I've undertaken a little private commission for Mr. Brangwyn. I sha'n't be long about it, and I'll meet you at the Victoria at the room in which we recently breakfasted."

"Go, by all manner o' means," said Belle, "and be back as soon as ye can."

Billery hurried away, but, reflecting in a moment that too great an appearance of haste in such a place might conceivably lead to embarrassing results, he modified his pace to a saunter, and after passing through various rooms and corridors, exchanging a friendly nod here and there with some whose acquaintance he had made in his professional visits, he came leisurly upon the street and called a hansom. Arriving at Alexis's flat he rang and waited, and again rang and waited, but received no answer. He was just about to turn away when the manservant whom he remembered as having seen in his friend's service came up the staircase.

"Mr. Brangwyn, sir?" said the valet, in answer to Billery's inquiry. "Mr. Brangwyn has just received an urgent summons to the Continent, sir. He has some particular business to transact at Dover on the way, Mr. Billery, and he's gone off with nothing but a handbag."

"Did he leave any word about his return?" asked Billery.

"He said he might be away a day or two—perhaps more. Anyway, he said I needn't forward letters, so I don't suppose he's gone for long."

FUR-CLAD CHICKS.

Nature Tries to Counteract the Effect of Cold Storage.

That Nature, although beneficent, may also be shortsighted, is shown in Science Siftings.

A friend of his set a hen recently on a sitting of cold storage eggs. Everything went well, and in due time seventeen lively little chicks rewarded the old hen's patience.

They grew rapidly, but as the down of their adolescence disappeared, it was replaced not by the customary feathers, but by thick and glossy fur of various colors.

The owner's theory is that kindly Nature, which adapts all her creatures to their environment, thoughtfuly substituted the fur for the feathers during the cold storage period.

So far so good, but the eggs might have been hatched in the tropics, where the chickens would have found the fur a work of supererogation. Nature, if not short sighted, was at least too impatient to wait until the destination of the eggs was decided on.

It Was Logical.

Two Irishmen were digging a sewer. One of them was a big, strong man about six feet four inches in height, and the other one was a little, puny man about four feet six inches. The foreman came along to see how the work was progressing and noticed that one of them was doing more work than the other.

"Look here," he cried, "how is it that little Dennis Dugan, who is only half your size, is doing nearly twice as much work as you, Patrick?"

Glancing down to his partner, Pat replied:

"And why shouldn't he? Ain't he nearer to it?"

In work and in games you are having a very good time, but the use of it all is to prepare you for future citizenship. One of these days, it may be, that you shall be a judge, a governor, a commander-in-chief or the president of the United States. Certainly a future president, a future judge of the supreme court, a future commander-in-chief, a future admiral of the navy is to be seen to-day on the campus or in the classroom, and he is getting ready for his work.

Whether or not you are the boy on whom great honors and responsibilities of some proud position will center, who can tell? In our country, however, the man who votes is as important as the man who is elected, and if there were no good men and true to drop the white ballots into the boxes on election days, who knows what would become of the state and the nation? Each has a positive duty to all the rest, and if a single one is untrustworthy, he weakens the effect of the whole and helps to pull down the country and the flag that he loves.

I speak to you as a future citizen. I hope you will be an ardent politician. No game that you play to-day is one half so interesting as the great game of politics The word itself as you fellows in the Latin class know, is derived from the word city, and it is the city with its vast mingling of interests and its crowding population that focuses the life of the nation at strategic points.

The politician does not have to live in the city to give his thought and care to the common good of his native land. In every country town, in every valley where farmhouses send their blue smoke curling up to the sky, honorable politicians may live and do their work for the welfare of our great people. Mark the fact, that while there are ignoble and dishonorable politicians, they are in the minority, and there always comes a time when they are defeated and their best laid plans are held up to contempt while the cause of right triumphs. In the game of politics, we need to remember this stanza:

And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

If you intend to be a politician of the right kind, you must begin to prepare yourself now by reading the newspapers. No future citizen will ever amount to much who pores over dime novels and sensational stories and lets newspapers pass him by. The daily press gives us the story of the great world in which we live. A good newspaper is worth as much in the education you are getting as your lexicon, your algebra or your Latin text book. The world is closely knit together, and the politics and finance of one part of the globe have a great deal to do with what may be going on thousands of miles away in another part of the globe.

* * * * *

Unless you are contented to be ignorant and narrow and prejudiced, you will listen to the talk that goes on about you, and you will sometimes go with your father or uncle to a political meeting.

The future citizen should, on the whole, be a party man, for the reason that parties stand for principles. In a country like ours, there are always two great patriotic parties with good men on both sides, and sometimes one holds the balance of power and sometimes the other.

Does it not seem a pity that American boys who have so many advantages and who look up with so much admiration at our glorious flag when it floats from the roof of the church or the schoolhouse, should grow up to take very little personal interest in the government of which that flag is the symbol.

Study your United States history. Study it with care. See how it strikes deep roots into the soil. Look how it reaches back into the history of nations that have gone before it. In days to come, there are many problems that this land of ours will have to face. There are difficulties in front of us that will call for the greatest wisdom. You boys are preparing yourselves now for the contests that will be carried on to a successful issue, and will be settled, not by your fathers and grandfathers, but by yourselves.

Every boy should have his ideal hero, whom he should imitate and follow. Remember that the heroes are not all dead. A good many of them are alive. They are in the van fighting for freedom as strongly and intensely as those did who are peacefully lying in hallowed graves to-day. Have your heroes. Shout for them when the time comes. Wear their names on badges and treasure them in your hearts. No boy will be worth much to his country who is not a hero worshiper, who does not value freedom and who is not looking forward with eager anticipation to the day when he, too, with other men, shall have a vote.

IN THE FESTIVE SEASON.

Many Things One Can Do to Make Others Glad.

There is something radically wrong not only with an individual, but in the spirit of the times when the assertion is made: "I don't care about Christmas and I wish the fuss was all over." It always hurts me to hear such a statement and I wish I had the power to restore the true meaning of this blessed festival. If we could or would only get away from the "give and take" theory with which nearly every one seems imbued and remember that Luther said even in his remote day that "the heart of the giver makes the gift dear and precious." If we could only learn to be satisfied with doing within our means, so that the joys of Christmas would not be clouded by the dread of those fast approaching "January bills."

The Christmas post card has become a most helpful factor in spreading "the glad tidings of great joy," and this season's productions are a delight. The ones specially for children with "Santa Claus" descending the chimney and speeding over snow-clad hills with his eight tiny reindeer are really fascinating.

A young woman who has a desire to do far more than her purse will permit confided to me this scheme for remembering a large number of individuals who are obliged to live in "Homes" and other institutions. She said she thought it must be most disheartening to have the postman pass by with no mail for them on Christmas day so she has obtained the names of the very friendless ones and addressed a souvenir card to be delivered on the 25th. This is surely a delightful thing to do, and I hope many who read this will avail themselves of the suggestion.

Let us endeavor to make this holiday season more of a real pleasure and less of what Hopkinson Smith says it has become, "a social clearing house for the swapping of gifts."

A Christmas Card Party.

This affair promises to be most unique and the hostess is endeavoring to observe all the Christmas symbols. Of course the decorations are to consist of wreaths of evergreen and holly, festoons of roped greens, clusters of mistletoe suspended by red ribbon, and quantities of red candles with red and white frosted shades. The invitations are to be ornamented with holly sprays, the red berries cut out across the top of the sheet. A small lad dressed as Santa Claus will deliver these missives. In a large bay window there is to be a tree lighted by electricity with the stocking shaped score cards; red pencils, tiny candy canes and hundreds of little favors for keeping the score. "Santa Claus" will be on duty all the evening distributing the counters after each game. To facilitate things, these trinkets are tied to the tree in bunches, and as many bunches as there will be games played. Over the head table there is to be a large bell hung ornamented with holly and the table will have a baton with which the bell is to be struck.

The prizes are all to be done up in holly paper with red and green ribbons. The refreshments to be served at the small tables will consist of tomato soup in cups with a spoonful of whipped cream, tiny biscuit, scalloped opsters in ramakins with a sprig of holly; Waldorf salad in red cases, cheese wafers; individual plum pudding brought in a blaze with brandy and surrounded by a wreath of holly. On each little red frosted cake there is to be a white frosting star. During the game Christmas egg-nog will be served from the great family punch bowl.

ATTRACTIONS OF WESTERN CANADA.

Magnificent Crop Returns for the Year 1906.

The manner in which the Canadian West has attracted settlers in recent years has caused many of our journals and public men to "sit up and take notice," to use a current phrase. From every European country and from almost every State in the Union large number of settlers have flocked to the prairie provinces of Canada, where free homesteads and wide opportunities are open to all who desire to avail themselves of them.

The greatest factor in attracting settlers lies in the inherent richness of soil and suitability of climate for producing what is universally considered to be the finest wheat in the world—the "No. 1 Hard" of Canadian growth—and other cereals that rank in the very first class. This year the harvest returns were: Wheat, 90,000,000 bushels; oats, 76,000,000 bushels; barley, 17,000,000 bushels; and when it is considered that the entire population of the three provinces—as evidenced by the quinquennial census just completed—is only 810,000; it is easily seen that the lure of the Canadian West is in its agricultural potentialities.

Another feature which attracts the settler is that railway construction is proceeding with such rapidity that almost every district is within easy reach of outside markets, and that good prices for all lines of farm products rule practically from the commencement of agricultural operations. This is a factor which did not prevail when the earlier settlements in the West were made in Canada and in the United States, and has given a great impetus to Canadian Western settlement in recent years.

The free grant system of homesteads which prevails in the prairie provinces, by which every settler who is able and willing to comply with the conditions of actual settlement (by no means onerous) is given 160 acres free, except $10 for entry, is a great drawing card, and in the last fiscal year gathered in over 189,000 additional to the western population, of which 57,796 were from the United States.

The further fact, as is strongly brought about by the agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere, that a splendid common school system, practically free, prevails throughout the entire country, and is easy of access in even the most remote districts, is another great inducement to the settler who has the future welfare of his family in mind, and this, coupled with the fact that western Canadian law and order are proverbial, completes a circle of good and sufficient reasons why the tide of immigration has set in so steadily toward the country to the north of our boundary line.

are many; in fact almost every serious illness has its origin in constipation, and some medicines, instead of preventing constipation, add to it. This is true of most cathartics, which, when first used, have a beneficial effect, but the dose has to be continually increased, and before long the remedy ceases to have the slightest effect. There is one preparation, however, that can be relied upon to produce the same results with the same dose, even after fifty years' daily use, and this is Brandreth's Pills, which has a record of over 100 years as the standard remedy for constipation and all troubles arising from an impure state of the blood.

Brandreth's Pills are the same fine laxative tonic pill your grandparents used, and are for sale everywhere, either plain or sugar-coated.

A Bogus Santa Claus.

On the evening before Christmas, in the year of grace 1894, Mr. Rufus Bell created a mild sensation at his home by arriving with a parcel of huge dimensions. He made sure that none of the children were about the house before he entered and, when he had crossed the threshold he immediately concealed the mysterious bundle in a closet and locked the door upon it.

Mrs. Bell at once demanded an explanation, and her niece, Miss Rose Mayne, seconded the demand strongly; thereupon Mr. Bell struck the attitude popular with candidates when they say "My fellow countrymen," and said:

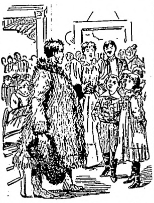
"Ladies, I am but human, singular as the statement may seem; but I am nevertheless a being of ideas and resources—"

"We are always acquiring information," interrupted Mrs. Bell.

"Rose," continued Mr. Bell, serenely, turning to the younger lady, "as a school teacher you must have studied juvenile human nature, and you must have been shocked by the fact that children cease to believe in the good old stories of Santa Claus and his reindeer almost as soon as they are able to walk; in fact, I have heard you comment upon this sad truth. What is Christmas to a child, if the child doesn't believe in Santa Claus? Where are all the romance and poetry of the occasion? My own children are skeptical when I tell them the charming legend of Kris Kringle; I have undertaken to convince them that there is a Santa Claus; I have decided to let them see Santa Claus in person."

This announcement naturally pleased the ladies; and their excitement was quite intense when Mr. Bell produced a bundle from the closet and opened it, producing a lot of ancient furs and a bearskin hat that had probably been used by a drum major of the town band; to please the ladies he donned his costume at once, and they voted him a perfect Santa Claus, as he certainly was.

"Now," he said, when he had resumed his ordinary raiment, "I don't think it quite fair to reserve this entertainment for our own children exclusively, so I have invited a few good little boys and girls of the neighborhood; and Mr. and Mrs. Brewster will be here, and young Mr. Moon; I have let them into the secret. You will tell the children to hang their hosiery in the north room, and inform them that you have reason to believe that they may see Santa Claus if they sit up and keep perfectly still; at the proper time I'll ascend the roof and slide down the chimney; it is just large enough for the purpose. And I guess that's all."



Everybody Crowded About Mr. Bell.

During the balance of the evening, until 9 o'clock, there was a great deal of active preparation in progress in the Bell mansion; the north room was tidied, and a semi-circle of chairs placed for the expected guests, who began to arrive at the stipulated time. Mr. Bell was in a fine frenzy of excitement; he declared to his wife in a whisper, that he felt like a boy again, and she replied that she was ten years younger than she was before he unfolded his delicious scheme. By half-past nine all the guests, large and small, were in their places; Mr. Moon, a young man who had been studying law for ten years, and who hoped soon to be admitted to the bar, sat next to Miss Rose, upon whose hand he had serious designs, and his efforts to appear at ease were amusing and instructive; Mr. Brewster, who was small and timid looking, nestled beside his wife, who was massive and had a bass voice; silence brooded over the throng, until Mr. Bell, who was given to speeches, went into another attitude, and said:

"Children, I have heard that you don't believe there is a Santa Claus? You have formed the unworthy idea that your parents and friends fill your stockings on Christmas eve, and that good old fur-clothed Santa is a myth. Now, I have here a letter from Santa.

(Great excitement among the children.)

"And he says he will arrive here at 10 o'clock, coming down the chimney which you see before you. I must leave you for awhile, as I must keep watch out side; but you must all keep your seats, or Santa Claus may become angry, and refuse to enter."

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

Ten o'clock was announced by the tall clock in the adjoining room, and the mellow chimes of that ancient timepiece had scarcely died away before the children heard other sounds. Up overhead there was a violent scratching and tearing, as though a poorly shod reindeer was trying to climb the roof, and they distinctly heard the silvery tinkling of bells, and some of them believed that they could make out the grinding of the sleigh runners on the shingles. It was a moment of awful excitement; Johnnie Bell, who had never quailed in danger's stormy hour, did not try to conceal the cold prespiration that stood on his forehead, Amelia Grimm, whose courage was generally unswerving and uncompromising, tried to stifle a shriek, and only half succeeded.

After the roof had been successfully ascended, they heard a great noise by the chimney, as though Santa had just alighted, and then they heard him descend the interior of the chimney; lower and lower he came, until finally his legs were in the room, and they kicked in a very human and prosaic way. After they had kicked for awhile, and no more of the visitor's body appeared, it began to dawn upon everybody that Santa was in difficulties. The children and the older visitors sat staring at the legs for a few minutes, and then Mr. Moon, who was a man for an emergency, gallantly rushed to the rescue. He seized Santa's ankles and pulled with all the force of a pair of gymnasium-educated arms, but he didn't seem to make any headway, for Santa yelled in a voice that sounded like a doleful cry from the tomb that he was being wedged in tighter than ever, and he implored the company to do something for his relief.

The elders held a council of war. Mr. Brewster mildly suggested that it would be a good plan to send in a fire alarm, but his wife crushed him with a look, and said that the only way she saw was to take the bricks out of the chimney; and she added: "This comes of a man trying to act the fool when he ought to be thinking of the world to come."

Meanwhile Santa groaned and shrieked in a fearful manner in the chimney, and protested that if he wasn't soon released he would be a corpse. Mrs. Bell was fainting comfortably in her armchair, and most of the children had vanished. It was then that Miss Rose approached Mr. Moon, wringing her hands and weeping beautifully.

"Mr. Moon," she cried, "you see the sufferings of my uncle, and you stand here idle. Can you not rescue him?"

"Miss Rose," said the intrepid young man, "I can get him out of that in five minutes; it rests with you whether I shall do it or not. The last time I proposed to you you refused me, as usual. If you'll promise to marry me, I'll rescue your uncle; if you won't, I leave this town forever—and your uncle in the chimney. His kicks are growing feeble and labored; I don't think he can last more than three minutes."

The young lady leveled a glance of scorn at him that should have withered him, but he stood firm. He felt that his whole future was at stake, and reflected that all's fair in love and war. There was a stern, cold silence for a moment or two. Meanwhile the vibrations of Santa's legs became desultory and spasmodic, and his muffled groans betokened extreme exhaustion.

"Wretch!" cried the young lady, at last, "rescue my uncle! You shall have the reward you ask."

The wretch bowed with noble grace and a moment later was on the roof, with a rope in his hand; he let the rope down the chimney, and called to Santa Claus to grasp it and hang on. Santa did so, and toiled upward while Mr. Moon pulled; after fifteen minutes of distressing work, Santa emerged from the chimney, a poor, battered effigy of himself. Mr. Moon assisted him to the ground and into the house, where the children and other guests crowded about him and laughed; for children always laugh when they ought to weep.

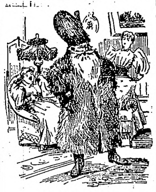
When Mr. Bell was recovered sufficiently, he leaned against the back of a chair—he was too weak for an attitude—and said:

"Children, if you tell about this around town, I'll have you all arrested and sent to the penitentiary for life. And you, Johnnie, for that titter I'll make you saw a cord of green wood. I want you all to go home and tell your parents that Santa Claus is the biggest hoax of the Twentieth century, and I'll guarantee every word you say."

By careful nursing Mr. Bell was restored to his normal health in a few days, and his first act was to have the old chimney taken down.

One day in March Mr. Moon led his bride to the altar; he held his head high and his eye sparkled. After the ceremony there was a dinner at Mr. Bell's residence, and Mr. Bell himself was radiant with good humor and hospitality. He called the young couple aside, and indulged in an attitude and a speech:

"My beloved ones," he began, "the morning of life opens radiant to you; sunlight glimmers upon the waters, there are blue skies overhead, and—er—the robin redbreasts are twittering on the boughs. But dark days of tempest and storm may come; rolling waves may threaten your bark, and then remember that if you need a helping hand, you may call upon Rufus Bell."



A Perfect Santa Claus.

Mr. Moon looked dreamily out of the window.

"May I ask a favor of you now?" he asked.

"A hundred of them, my dear boy."

"Well, I see it's snowing, and there's enough on the ground to make sleighing. Will you lend us your reindeer and sled for awhile?"

Polk—Hang up stocking this Christmas?

Dolk—Nope—hung up overcoat.

Sneezing and Blessings.

The world has always sneezed, and it has always invoked a blessing on itself for doing so, ever since Prometheus called one down upon the clay figures that sneezed when he animated it with celestial fire. An old Buckinghamshire rhyme makes it of importance to us to notice on which day of the week we catch cold:

Sneeze on Monday, sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on Tuesday, kiss a stranger;
Sneeze on Wednesday, get a letter;
Sneeze on Thursday, something better;
Sneeze on Friday, sneeze for sorrow;
Saturday, see your true love to-morrow.

Puzzled.

"What I want," said the discontented summer boarder, "is to enjoy the comforts of home."

"If that's the case," answered Farmer Corntossel, "I don't quite see what you left home for in the first place."

Bullet That Does Not Kill.

A bullet that hits the mark but does not kill has just been invented by Dr. Deirliers of Paris. The details of its construction are not mentioned, but it is said to be hollow and can be used several times. In a test for duel practice pistols were used with steel guards resembling a sword hilt, because, although the bullet does not penetrate the clothing, it will wound naked flesh. Both men wore goggles. Out of 272 shots struck some part of the bodies of the duelists.

TORTURED WITH ECZEMA.

Tremendous Itching Over Whole Body—Scratched Until Bled—Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"Last year I suffered with a tremendous itching on my back, which grew worse and worse, until it spread over the whole body, and only my face and hands were free. For four months or so I suffered torments, and I had to scratch, scratch, scratch, until I bled. At night when I went to bed things got worse, and I had at times to get up and scratch my body all over, until I was as sore as could be, and until I suffered excruciating pains. They told me that I was suffering from eczema. Then I made up my mind that I would use the Cuticura Remedies. I used them according to instructions, and very soon indeed I was greatly relieved. I continued until well, and now I am ready to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to any one. Mrs. Mary Metzger, Sweetwater, Okla., June 28, 1905."

Complying With the Requirements.

The man with the steamer cap and bronzed face wrote his name in the hotel register.

"I'd like a room to-night and breakfast in the morning," he said.

"Guests without baggage are expected usually to pay in advance," hinted the clerk.

"Well," said the traveler, hesitating a moment, "most of my baggage has gone out to my home in the suburbs, but I have one piece down at the station. I'll go and get it."

He went away and returned half an hour later with an oblong wooden box under his arm.

"Here it is," he said, depositing the box on the clerk's desk.

The clerk looked through the slats that were nailed on one side of it, and his hair rose on end.

"Wh-what is it?" he gasped.

"It's a particularly rare specimen of rattlesnake," answered the stranger. "Take good care of it. It's valuable. You may show me up to my room now, if you please."

SKIN DISEASES

HUMORS IN THE BLOOD

When the blood is pure, fresh and healthy, the skin will be soft, smooth and free from blemishes, but when some acid humor takes root in the circulation its presence is manifested by a skin eruption or disease. These humors get into the blood, generally because of an inactive or sluggish condition of the members of the body whose duty it is to collect and carry off the waste and refuse matter of the system. This unhealthy matter is left to sour and ferment and soon the circulation becomes charged with the acid poison. The blood begins to throw off the humors and acids through the pores and glands of the skin, producing Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Psoriasis, Salt Rheum and skin eruptions of various kinds. Eczema appears, usually with a slight redness of the skin followed by pustules from which there flows a sticky fluid that dries and forms a crust, and the itching is intense. It is generally on the back, breast, face, arms and legs, though other parts of the body may be affected. In Tetter the skin dries, cracks and bleeds; the acid in the blood dries up the natural oils of the skin, which are intended to keep it soft and pliant, causing a dry, feverish condition and giving it a hard, leathery appearance. Acne makes its appearance on the face in the form of pimples and black heads, while Psoriasis comes in scaly patches on different parts of the body One of the worst forms of skin trouble is Salt Rheum; its favorite point of attack is the scalp, sometimes causing baldness. Poison Oak and Ivy are also disagreeable types of skin disease. The humor producing the trouble lies dormant in the blood through the Winter to break out and torment the sufferer with the return of Spring. The best treatment for all skin diseases is S. S. S. It neutralizes the acids and removes the humors so that the skin instead of being irritated and diseased, is nourished by a supply of fresh, healthy blood. External applications of salves, washes, lotions, etc., while they soothe the itching caused by skin affections, can never cure the trouble because they do not reach the blood. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and forces out every particle of foreign matter and restores the blood to its normal, pure condition, thereby permanently curing every form of skin affection. Book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I suffered with Eczema for forty years and could find nothing to cure me until I tried S. S. S. I suffered intensely with the itching and burning; pustules would form from which there flowed a sticky fluid; crusts would come on the skin and when scratched off the skin was left as raw as a piece of beef. I suffered agony in the long years I was afflicted, but when I used S. S. S. I found a perfect cure. There has never been any return of the trouble.

Swimming by Mechanical Power.

A novel aquatic propeller, which will do for man in the water what the motor cycle is doing on land, being related to the motor boat very much as the motor cycle is to the automobile, has been devised by Constantini, of Paris. The apparatus according to the Paris correspondent of Scientific American, is practical and successful, and will be a useful life-saver. Golden Grain Belt beer is sanitarily and scientifically brewed. Served daily with your meals will nourish and strengthen the entire body. Don't let your supply run out. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Croakston.

REAPPOINTED P. M.

Congressman Steenerson has notified Postmisstress Marshall that she has been recommended to be continued in her present capacity for the next four years. This is equivalent to an appointment, and will be good news to those who make daily trips to the postoffice, as it assures continued efficient service and the cherry smile and manner of our postmistress has become almost a necessity to the citizens here.

JOY FOR THE EDITORS.

On Monday morning the hearts of the editors were gladdened by the arrival of the families of both, Mrs. J. J. Cahill and daughter Loretta, and Mrs. Wm. Koch Jr. and son, Alton.

GRAZING FEES WILL BE COLLECTED ON RESERVES

Regulations Unmodified by Recent Decision of Federal Judge—Misapprehension Corrected.

A recent decision of the Federal judge has been widely commented upon throuout the west on the supposition that it declared illegal the regulation of grazing on forest reserves and the system of charging for grazing permits. As a matter of fact, the decision, which was handed down by Judge Whitson, of the United States District Court for Eastern Washington, in the case of the United States vs. Matthews, has no bearing whatever upon the legality of the grazing regulations or of grazing fees, which stand precisely as before. The legal question involved was simply this: Does the law authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue regulations make the breach of those regulations a crime?

Judge Whitson's decision merely answered this question "No." It was in substance that the objection to the indictment against Walter Matthews was the absence of a law defining the act therein charged as a criminal offense. Upon that ground the court held that the demurrer must be sustained and the defendent discharged,

Though the point was simple and clear enough, it was entirely misconstrued in the press reports of the decision and in editorial comments upon it. For instance, in the Wyoming Tribune of Tuesday, November 6, news of Judge Whitson's action was given under the headlines: "Grazing Fees Illegal Decides Federal Judge," and the article declares that "As a result of the decision, Matthews, who entered the Mount Ranier Forest Reserve without the permit required by the secretary, is still using the reserve and is not paying the fee imposed by the secretary." As a matter of fact, Mr. Matthews's sheep were immediately removed upon notice by the forest official and have not since entered the reserve.

In the Sheridan, Wyo., Post it is said: "A decision fraught with importance to Wyoming stockmen is that appearing in this issue, wherein it is held by the United States District Court that the collection of fees for grazing live stock is illegal. Since its imposition this fee has been regarded as illegal and arbitrary by many well-informed Wyoming people, and the views expressed by the court in this decision meet with general approval here. The litigant is still running his sheep on the Ranier Reserve without paying the fees."

Decisions like Judge Whitson's had before been made by the Federal courts in three other districts, one of them six years ago, but none of these interferes in the slightest with the right of the United States to institute civil action against trespassers violating the grazing regulations, or with charging the grazing fee. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit decided definitely, in the case of Dastervignes vs. United States, that the provisions of the act of March 4, 1897, delegating to the Secretary the power to make regulations, is constitutional, that the regulation prohibiting the pasturing of sheep on forest reserves without a permit is valid, and that the Federal courts will enforce the regulation by injunction. The Supreme Court of Arizona, three judges sitting, in the case Dent vs. United States (76 Pacific Reporter, 455), went still further, under circumstances which made the decision most emphatic. Dent was criminally persecuted for grazing sheep on a forest reserve without a permit, in violation of the regulations, and the court had held that his act was not a crime; but as soon as the Dastervignes case was decided for for the Government the Arizona court granted a rehearing of the Dent case and held that the Dastervignes decision was binding on all courts, in the Ninth Circuit in criminal as well as civil cases, and that Dent was therefore guilty of a crime,

So far, therefore, the court decisions as to the criminality of trespass contrary to the forest reserve regulations are conflicting. Final adjutication of the point can not be had until the ruling of a higher court has been secured; but no court has questioned the right of the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations and to recover damages for trespass through civil action.

Grazing trespassers will be restrained from violation of the regulations by injunction proceedings and sued for civil damages until the higher courts shall have reached a decision as to the criminal character of such trespasses. The Forest Service will continue to exclude unpermitted stock from all forest reserves and to collect grazing fees for all stock under permit.

Considerable excitement was created on Saturday evening by Medric Page of Gentilly who hired a livery rig and started up Main street at a breakneck speed, lashing the maddened horses and yelling at the top of his voice, until turning the corner at Main and Sixth street he was thrown violently from the rig. He escaped injury other than a severe shaking up and the shock caused nothing worse than a short period of unconsciousness. Other than the exhaustion which came after their severe run the team received no injury. Page was lying unconscious in the snow on Sixth street and was taken to the city hall where he finally came to. He furnished bonds to appear in court to answer to the charge of disorderly conduct.

MANY FALL IN BLOODY RACE WAR

GOV. VARDAMAN ORDERS TROOPS TO THE SCENE OF THE DISTURBANCE.

Wahalak, Miss., Dec. 27.—A bloody race war broke out here Monday as the result of the killing of one negro and the wounding of another by a conductor on a Mobile & Ohio passenger train, while the latter was attempting to quell a disturbance on board his train. Negroes gathered here from the surrounding country, threatening vengeance on the whites. The governor was asked for assistance and two companies of militia were sent here.

Many have been killed, but the exact number is not known. Seven are known to be dead, three of whom were lynched.

The militia remained here all night and yesterday morning returned to Meridian, their presence here appearing no longer necessary.

Riot Breaks Out Afresh.

Jackson, Mich., Dec. 27.—Late last night Gov. Vardaman received a telegram from J. A. Quarles, a prominent citizen of Scooba, Miss., seven miles from Wahalak, stating that a further uprising had occurred, in which five unknown negroes were killed and that their slayers had been captured, and asking that twenty-five troopers be dispatched to that place to help hold the prisoners.

Gov. Vardaman promptly instructed the colonel commanding at Meridian to ask for a special train over the Mobile & Ohio railroad and to go to the scene as quickly as possible.

The latest estimate makes the total dead ten, of whom four are white.

JAPANESE EVADE EXCLUSION

POUR INTO THE UNITED STATES WITH HAWAII AS STEPPING STONE.

Washington, Dec. 27.—There is to be a new and independent report on the Japanese immigration question and when it is completed the president will transmit it to congress with another message, making the third on this subject.

Frank Sargent, the commissioner general of immigration, was at the White House and gave President Roosevelt a summary of his investigation of the Japanese tide of immigration into California through Hawaii. As he has but just arrived here and has not even begun preparation of his official report, the commissioner general was unwilling to give an outline of his conclusions.

His report will have great bearing upon the settlement of the Japanese difficulty on the Pacific coast, however, because all of this Oriental immigration now comes from the Hawaiian islands, and if the flow from Japan to Honolulu can be stopped the fear of Californians of an inundation of Japanese will disappear, violation of law and order will cease and normal labor conditions on the Pacific slope will be restored.

Southwestern Lines Lack Facilities to Handle the Traffis.

Washington, Dec. 27. — Chairman Knapp of the interstate commerce commission said yesterday that the car shortage problem is more serious in the Southwest than in the Northwest. He places the blame for the existing conditions equally on the shippers and the railroads.

"Prosperity in the Southwest," said Chairman Knapp, "is so great and crops are so heavy that the railroads are swamped. They have not in many cases either cars or trackage facilities to handle the abnormal volume of traffic offered for transportation. Lack of cars is not the only difficulty, but it is the greatest.

"If the shippers would load and unload cars with less delay, the car shortage problem would be solved to a great extent."

ACTION WILL TIE UP PROPOSED $60,000,000 INCREASE—ILLEGAL ISSUES.

St. Paul, Dec. 28.—Attorney General Young yesterday began suit in the district court to prevent the proposed issue of $60,000,000 new stock of the Great Northern, which was to have been made Jan. 4.

The court is asked to issue a permanent injunction against the issue of the stock and a temporary restraining order, pending the hearing of the suit.

The complaint says that the stock of the Great Northern is limited by its charter from the state to $30,000,000, and that additional stock can only be issued with the consent of the state railroad and warehouse commission, after a public hearing as to the necessity for the issue.

Unauthorized Increase.

The complaint says that on March 1, 1906, the road had increased its stock to $150,000,000, some of the increase being without authority, and that it is now proposed to add $60,000,000 more Jan. 4. The interest on this $60,000,000 at 7 per cent, the complaint points out, will add $4,200,000 to the annual fixed charges of the road, a great part of which of necessity will be paid by the people of Minnesota in freight and passenger charges.

The complaint insists that the road should have given the commission notice of the proposed increase that it might inquire into the purposes for which the money is to be used and the necessity therefor.

Violation of Law.

All these facts the complaint holds, constitute a gross subversion and violation of the law, which will result in great damage to the state if not prevented.

Reports from New York say that news of the beginning of the action caused a decided drop in the price of the stock of both the Great Northern and Northern Pacific.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IN PRISON

WITH GUARD STANDING BESIDE HIM, MAN COMMITS BOLD DEED.

Elmira, N. Y., Dec. 28.—Although a guard was standing close beside him last night, Frank Delaney succeeded in a bold attempt to end his life and the life of a woman who occupied a cell in the woman's dormitory of the Elmira county jail. The woman was Bessie Wells, awaiting sentence on Jan. 5 for abducting a young girl and harboring her for immoral purposes.

Delaney possessed a power of attorney for the woman and when he called at the jail and stated that he wished to consult with her there was no objection on the part of the warden, who sent a guard along with him. The guard stood close by while the man and woman were conferring together, when suddenly Delaney drew from his pocket a bottle of carbolic acid and passed it through the bars, the woman seized it and swallowed the contents. Instantly Delaney pressed a second bottle to his own lips. The guard sprang upon him, but the man fought him fiercely for a moment and then collapsed. He died before a physician could be called. The woman died within a short time.

NINE KILLED IN CRASH OF TRAINS

DISASTROUS WRECK OCCURS ON THE SOO RAILROAD AT ENDERLIN, N. D.

THIRTY-SEVEN ARE INJURED

CAUSE OF THE WRECK IS NOT KNOWN—CORONER IS INVESTIGATING.

Enderlin, N. D., Dec. 25.—The worst wreck ever known in this vicinity occurred early Sunday morning when two trains on the Soo railroad crashed together in the west end of the railway yards in this city. Eight men were killed outright, one died later from his injuries and thirty-seven persons were seriously injured. All the dead and most of the injured persons were in the smoking car, which was telescoped by the baggage car. The smoking car was crowded, and as the whistle had just sounded for Enderlin, most of the passengers in the car were standing when the crash came. The dead and injured were piled in heaps and the utmost confusion prevailed. Only two passengers in the smoking car escaped injury.

Citizens Work All Night.

The accident was so near the station that no time was lost in beginning the work of relief. Citizens worked all night in removing the dead and injured from the wreckage. The little hospital was quickly filled and the Hotel Hilton was converted into an emergency hospital, where the unfortunates were cared for. Physicians were summoned from nearby towns to assist in caring for the sufferers.

No explanation of the cause of the collision can now be given. The coroner is holding an inquest and all parties in any way connected with the accident are being rigidly examined.

The dead have all been identified and their bodies are now awaiting the disposition of friends and relatives.

MEN STICK TO THEIR POSTS

HEROISM OF CREW SAVES LIVES OF 380 PASSENGERS OF STRATHCONA.

Halifax, N. S., Dec. 25.—Word was received here yesterday from Port Dufrain, a small coast town some sixty miles east of this city, of the destruction by fire of the passenger steamer Strathcona.

That no lives were lost is due principally to the heroism of the engineers and firemen, who stuck to their posts until the steamer was beached and every one of the 380 passengers was landed.

In less than an hour after the beaching of the steamer she was burned to the water's edge.

Prevent Panic.

When the cry of fire was raised the wildest confusion prevailed. The passengers, most of them clad only in their night clothes, rushed on deck and made a dash for the lifeboats but the crew prevented a panic.

Down in the engine room the engineers and firemen stuck bravely to their posts, although the flames had begun to surround them.

Not until the keel of the vessel grated on a reef a mile from the entrance of the harbor did they abandon their dangerous positions and rush to the deck.

Then the boats were lowered and all of the passengers, together with the thirteen members of the crew, found safety on shore.

PURDY GOES TO TEXAS.

Assistant Attorney General Ordered to Probe Brownsville Riots.

Washington, Dec. 25. — President Roosevelt evidently is much impressed by the attitude of the senate towards his course in discharging the recalcitrant negro battalion of the Twenty-fifth infantry. He has taken steps to meet the senate in advance on the points at issue. He will begin additional investigation on his own account, and to that end he decided to send Assistant Attorney General Purdy to Brownsville to investigate fully and report upon facts from a legal standpoint.

The president also made public the old records relating to the dismissal of the Sixtieth Ohio regiment in the late days of the Civil war, and about which some question was raised in a positive manner by Senator Foraker in his speech on Thursday.

The question is asked in senatorial circles whether the country is to accept these announcements as an admission on the part of President Roosevelt that the case he presented to the senate and upon which he is presumed to have based his action in dismissing the soldiers was not as strong as he feels it should now be made through the co-operation of an attorney of the department of justice.

The sending of Attorney General Purdy to Brownsville at this time is regarded as rather remarkable.

Mr. Purdy is a Minneapolis man who has rendered excellent service in the department of justice.

ENTOMBED MINER IS RESCUED.

Sixteen Days' Confinement Ends After Heroic Work of Miners.

Bakersfield, Cal., Dec. 25. — L. B Hicks was rescued Saturday night from the Edison company tunnel, where he was imprisoned nearly sixteen days because of a cave-in. He is apparently suffering no ill effects from his unusual experience.

"I am feeling fine," was the first remark the miner made on reaching freedom.

Hicks aided his rescuers during the last few moments, eagerly digging his way through the miniature tunnel made by the workmen. He is not emaciated, as was expected, and did not need the stimulants that had been prepared for him.

Dr. Stinchfield, with tears in his eyes and his hands laid affectionately on Hicks' shoulders, said:

"Well, how are you, old boy?"

Showing much emotion, Hicks answered:

"I am feeling fine. I can never thank you, doctor, for what you have done."

Mob That Hung Negro at Annapolis Said to Have Been Boys.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 25. — The authorities here profess to be convinced that the lynching of the negro Davis, who confessed to a criminal assault on Mrs. John Reid, was the outcome of a lark by students of St. John's college. The state's attorney believes some members of the mob will be arrested and brought to trial.

BLAME FOR THE SOO WRECK

SWITCHING CREW RESPONSIBLE —CORONER'S JURY ARRAIGNS RAILROAD.

Enderlin, N. D., Dec. 27. — The switching crew in charge of the freight train is blamed for the terrible disaster here Sunday morning.

The frightful catastrophe when Passenger Train No. 106 on the Soo line, east-bound, crashed into a freight engine and cars in this city appears to be fully as horrible in details as the first stories indicated.

One of the injured, Henry Swenson of Benedict will probably die. His hip is fractured and his body cut and bruised in a terrible manner.

Two more names may be added to the list of persons killed, according to an unverified report in circulation here.

Verification of this report would make the total dead eleven, the total number of injured forty-one.

Coroner T. C. Patterson of Ransom county and a jury of three completed an inquest here over the bodies of nine victims.

A verdict was returned that the wreck was caused by the incompetence of the switching crew in charge of the freight train.

STATE RAILROAD COMMISSION ISSUES A NEW DISTANCE TARIFF.

St. Paul, Dec. 25. — The state railroad and warehouse commission has sent to the railroads copies of the new car load commodity rate tariff governing in Minnesota, pursuant to the recent investigation by the commission as to the reasonableness of present rates. The new schedule is on a mileage basis, and is to be made effective after Jan. 25.

Substantial reductions are made in all the rates. Deep cuts have been made in the grain and coal tariffs. Lumber rates are likewise slashed, while the live stock rates are not affected so much. Comparatively bigger cuts have been made in the soft coal rates than in the hard coal rates. The provision is made in the order that where any rate on grain or lumber now in effect is lower than the rate provided in the new schedule, the rate shall not be raised.

MRS. BLAINE GETS DIVORCE.

Decree Is "Railroaded" Through at a Star Chamber Session.

Yankton, S. D., Dec. 25.—At a star chamber session of court Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., was granted a divorce from the scion of the distinguished Maine family, whose escapades have so far sent two wives to the Dakota courts for release from him. The case was rushed to permit Mrs. Blaine to catch a train for Washington, D. C., to spend Christmas with her parents, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Philip Hichborn.

Perhaps no other case of wide interest has been "railroaded" with greater speed in the divorce courts of this state than this Blaine action.

At the trial she repeatedly recounted numerous scandalous incidents in which her husband had been involved. She admitted she had expected to reform him when she married him, but had failed. She had no time for tears, the train was waiting. She talked fast. Her husband's counsel made an appearance, but offered no opposition to the granting of the decree.

Judge Smith wrote the entry rapidly and a carriage whirled her to the station.

With a prophetic look forward, James J. Hill says: "By the year 1925 there will be in the United States 125,000,000 people, and by the middle of this century, within the lifetime of thousonds now living our population will be more than 200,000'0000. Where are these people to find profitable occupation? How are they to obtain the necessaries of life?"

The country pays the president $50,000 a year to enforce the laws. The Standard Oil company, charged with lawbreaking, has retained a lawyer to defend it at $150,000 a year—three times the salary of the president. The Standard, however, is not yet three times as powerful or as wealthy as the country.

The business interests and growth of more towns are checked and injured for want of confidence on the part of the business men and the lack of public spirit generally, than from opposition of neighboring towns and adverse surroundings. It is the get up and get there spirit that needs arousing to start many a town.

Should not some of the prominent men of Red Lake County take some action to bring before the present session of the legislature the fairness and necessity of representation for this district according to population? How about the representatives from this district? Are they looking after this important matter?

There is no time like the present to do a good turn for your home town. Buy local made goods. Patronize our local merchants and boost the town at every opportunity. The results will surprise you—and the benefits will be shared by all.

Reports say that liquor dealers in Bismarck, N. D., are renting sheds and barns for places in which to sell their goods during the session of the legislature. Perhaps the legislators have reputations that have gone before them.

Inquiry among the local merchants shows that the holiday business this year was larger in volume and more cash business was done than last year.

The heavy fall of snow this winter and the warm weather in the fall, should leave the ground in good condition for early spring farming.

The only kind of business that we can think of that don't need advertising is that of being good. That talks for itself.

The holidays having passed, it is now time to give your attention to making the coming tournament a success.

A RAZOR'S EDGE.

Results That Come From Stropping and Long Use.

Very thin is the edge of a razor blade. Its thickness has been estimated at about one half millionth of an inch. A writer says of this wonderfully thin bit of steel, when seen under a powerful microscope: "The extreme edge of the section is distinctly bent to one side. This is nearly always seen in razor edges. The actual bend represents the effect of the last stroke on the strop which this blade has received. Now, this bending of the metal quite near the edge, minute as it is, has some very important practical consequences. If the razor be used in such a way that the bend is toward the skin there will be a tendency for the edge itself to burrow downward into the skin, instead of sliding easily over the surface and merely cutting away the projecting hairs. If, on the other hand, the blade be applied to the face in such a way that the bend of the edge is away from the skin the edge will slide much more smoothly, with less tendency to cut or scratch the skin, while it will act upon the hairs in a slightly upward direction and thus tend to pull them tight while cutting. The direction of the bend of the edge can be regulated by the last few strokes on the strop.

"This minute amount of bending undergone by the metal near the edge of a razor blade has another practical result. We all know that a piece of wire which will quite easily stand being bent double will be broken if it be bent backward and forward many times. What really takes place is that the metal, which was strong and ductile to begin with, is gradually made hard and brittle and then finally breaks off. Now, the metal near the edge of a razor is being subjected to very similar treatment. Every turn on the strop reverses the direction of the bend near the edge, and, although the amount of bending is too slight ever to bring about actual breakage of such an elastic metal as hardened steel, it is yet sufficient to bring about a change in the metal which renders it less elastic and able to stand the strain. This is why a razor which has been used long ceases to cut well or to hold a good edge.

"Now it has been discovered that steel which has lost its proper elastic qualities by such a process of 'fatigue,' as it is called, is capable of recovering its good qualities under favorable circumstances. It will recover in this way if left at rest, though this is a comparatively slow process, which explains the fact that a tool which has become useless through continued use will be as good as ever after a prolonged rest. But recovery will take place much more rapidly if the steel be warmed, so that a few minutes' exposure to the temperature of boiling water will bring about recovery to an extent that would have required several days' rest at the ordinary temperatures. This fact explains the advantage to be derived from the familiar practice of 'steaming' a razor before use."

Don't Starve Your Bird.

It is a common mistake to think that pets can only be taught when hungry and to commence a bird's training by depriving it of breakfast, dinner or supper is a most unhappy beginning. In reality the feathered folk are just as apt and full of fun after a comfortable meal as before it, and to starve, scold or otherwise ill treat the little creature will usually render it too unhappy to learn quickly if at all. Birds are extremely nervous beings. They love a low, quiet voice and gentle movements—love to be talked to, coaxed and made much of. If the pet is a new one and seems specially excitable or timid, you will have to teach it first of all not to fear you. Any little games he is to learn must be acquired afterward.—Mary Dawson in St. Nicholas.

A Singer's Lungs.

"I sang 196 notes that time," he said, "without once taking breath."

"Indeed. That must be a record."

"No. The record is held by Courtice Pounds. Pounds sang 316 notes without respiration in 1898. The record previous to that was held by Farinelli, with 300 notes. Norman Salmond has sung 287 notes in this way.

"It is wonderful what lungs trained singers have. The average man could hardly sing fifty notes without breathing, whereas to the singer 200 would be nothing."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Nome Means Home.

It is said that the name of Nome was the result of an error made by some Englishman in writing a letter. He evidently intended to write the word "home," but the makers of the maps read it Nome, and thus the name Nome belongs to history and the great district of Alaska. Some authorities claim that the word Nome is a corruption of the Indian phrase or word Knoma, meaning something like "I know it."—National Magazine.

Happiness.

If you cannot be happy in one way, be in another, and this facility of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, for health and good humor are almost the whole affair. Many run about after felicity, like an absent-minded man hunting for his hat while it is in his hand or on his head.

Martyrdom.

"Sympathetic people have a hard time in this world."

"In what way?"

"They have to listen to other people's troubles and never get a chance to tell their own."

The most valuable book in the British museum is the "Codex-Alexandrinus," said to be worth £300,000.

Hunting For Eternal Youth.

When we read the story of Ponce de Leon and other adventurous mariners sailing unknown seas in quest of the land of eternal sunshine and never ending youth we think of them as mistaken dreamers, although admiring their enthusiasm. In one sense all mankind today yearn to prolong the period of youthfulness, yet very few civilized men and women expect to accomplish this by a miracle. The alleged discoverers of an elixir of life may get a brief hearing from the susceptible few, but the great bulk of people go on preparing for old age and death. Mariner and alchemist alike are at a discount in face of the stubborn and universal fact that mankind must grow old and die in the twentieth century the same as in the first and, as we believe, for countless centuries before that.

Yet it would appear from the conclusions reached by Dr. Carl Snyder, who writes of "The Quest of Prolonged Youth" in the Monthly Review, that the question whether men will ever learn how to avert old age is debatable from the point of view of medical science today. The doctor himself inclines to the belief that while we may never learn how to avert it, we may at least learn its cause, something of which we know practically nothing at present.

Dr. Snyder reviews theories and explanations as to the cause of old age that have been put forth in the past, citing Dr. Muhlman of Odessa as authority for the theory that where growth stops in plant or animal life death begins. In fact, life itself involves a process of cell degeneration, and old age or aging begins with growth. Decay is first noticed in cells which by reason of remoteness from channels of nutrition have the greatest difficulty in securing food. The nerves and brain are farthest from sources of supply and first cease to grow, while the skin, lungs and linings of the body continue to grow up to advanced age. Dr. Snyder breaks in at this point to observe that the most complex organisms, with millions and billions of cells, live as long as the simpler forms with few cells. Age increases with size, and, while May flies and moths live but a few hours or days, elephants and whales live 200 years or more.

In this question of nutrition for the cells is involved arterial degeneration, and the idea that "a man is as old as his arteries" is of very ancient date. Dr. Snyder contends that arteriosclerosis is a condition but not a cause of old age.

As a preface to the argument for the hope, as above referred to, that man may some time learn the cause of old age, Dr. Snyder says, "The aging of the body is the aging of the cells, but we do not yet understand what it is that makes the cells grow old—what makes us die." While acknowledging that in the present state of physiological knowledge the outlook for the Ponce de Leons of today is not cheerful, this author observes that physiology was born but yesterday. Much if not most of our knowledge of the more intricate processes of life has come within a few years. Newton did not know the office of his lungs. Franklin probably never heard of oxygen. Laplace knew nothing of the mechanism of the nerves, and to Sir Humphry Davy the subject was new. Pepsin was then unknown, and, Dr. Snyder adds, "Gladstone probably died still believing in the separate creation of the species." Not until recent years was it known that iodine and arsenic are essential constituents of the body and that forms of life exist in an atmosphere oxygen free. Much which yet remains obscure may sooner or later be cleared up, among other things, old age.

Dr. Snyder concludes that habits and conditions of life do not seriously affect its duration. The problem is to control artificially the restoration of physical substance, worn down with every expenditure of energy. This "is the more or less conscious aim of all rational scientific investigation." Meanwhile the average man and woman lives on in the expectation of fading powers, with death at the end. Herbert Spencer began putting his house in order for the grim visitor at forty, yet lived to be eighty-four. Most people act as though fifty were the dividing line even when they refuse to admit it. And, after all, old age and death seem a necessary part of the universal "adaptation of organisms to their environment." An immortal species would eventually, through reproduction, destroy all other forms of life on the earth.

The Transalaskan-Siberian Railway company, recently incorporated, does not propose to tunnel Bering strait with the $6,000,000 capitalization with which it starts. This amount will probably all go for preliminaries, such as surveys, organization and exploiting stock.

CRIMINALS IN INDIA

WHOLE TRIBES WHOSE HEREDITARY PROFESSION IS THEFT.

Robbers Born and Kept So by Caste, They Are Polite and Modest Until the "Profession" Requires Them to Become Cruel and Ferocious.

India is usually spoken of as a land where life and property have become safe under British rule. True, the bands of thugs have been broken up, the Pindharee hordes have been suppressed, and the British police system is spread over the whole country, but the criminal tribes or castes, those whose hereditary "profession" is robbery and nothing else, remain, their instincts strong, wanting only opportunity to practice their traditional calling, which the Indian caste system forbids them to abandon.

These tribes are most numerous and most wayward in the united provinces, in which are Cawnpur and Lucknow, the cities associated forever with the Indian mutiny.

Half of the division is Oudh, the native province last annexed by Britain, many of whose old men vividly remember when every "talookdar," or feudal chief, lived in a fortified castle and retained a swarm of armed men, who received no pay, but lived on the country. They were official robbers, and their example gave free scope to the "professional" robbers, or, as they have always been known in India, the criminal tribes.

These tribes are the Sanaurians, the Barwars, the Sansiahs, the Doms, the Haburahs, the Aheriahs, the Banriahs, the Bhatus. Each tribe has its own dialect, dress and customs.

A singular feature of Indian life is that persons who would be considered depraved characters in a European country and would bear the stamp of their nature on their faces are not depraved in their own estimation or in that of the people at large. A casual murderer is not ashamed of himself nor abhorred by his neighbors, who welcome him back among them if he escapes the gallows and is released after a term in jail. The universal belief that all things are decreed by fate accounts for this amazing state of feeling. Much more, then, are men regarded with indifference or even respect whose time honored, hereditary and natural profession is robbery with murder.

So the members of these tribes go in and out of the towns and villages without misgivings, and there is not a sign in their faces or manner to indicate that their business is robbery and murder.

When a gang encamps outside of a town the inhabitants feel uncomfortable and take precautions, but cherish no ill will against the strangers. And when robberies and murders occur almost immediately within a radius of twenty miles they take more precautions, but regard the whole affair as a visitation of Providence, like a flood or a fire.

These habitual criminals are not depraved in any sense understood by the people. They simply have the misfortune to belong to a trade which is unpleasant for the neighborhood—like a dyer's or a tanner's.

They are well satisfied with themselves and are as careful as other people of their respectability. They have no unusual vices; they do not get drunk or riotous; they are civil, courteous and unassuming. Cruelty and ferocity are with them neither habits nor pleasures, but simply methods of business.

During the excitement of a sudden attack the people if they do not run away will turn out and aid the police in repelling or capturing the robbers. But if a police inquiry begins two or three days after the robbers have done their work unmolested the people will usually do nothing to help in tracing them and will even deny that they have lost anything.

For many years past the government of India has worked to induce these criminal tribes to settle down to a peaceable and industrious life.

But progress is very slow. Vagabondage is bred in the bone and marrow of the tribes, and marauding is their chosen occupation. From time to time men will suddenly disappear, perpetrate several during dakaitis in another district and escape over the border into one of the independent native states which cluster round three sides of the united provinces.

The word "dakaiti," also spelled "dacoity," means robbery by a gang of armed men, and a dakait, or dacoit, is a member of such a gang.

An assault by robbers in India differs from one in Europe or America in that it always takes place at night and is accompanied by a tremendous amount of noise. The Indians are a noisy people at all times, and in a robbery with violence the robbers' object is to terrify their victims into a panic; hence whether travelers be waylaid on a lonely road or a wealthy man's house be attacked in a village the assault is always made suddenly, with loud shouts and yells and in the case of a village with beating of drums and waving of lighted torches.

The persons attacked bellow for all they are worth, but rarely offer resistance, and the general effect is so terrifying to the cowardly people that the neighbors either fly or else barricade their doors and lie still till the robbers have got at least a mile away with their plunder. Even the shrieking of women under torture does not put heart into one of them, for the men of a house that is attacked try to bolt for their lives if they can and leave the women to the mercy of the robbers, who apply fire to them and torture them in more atrocious ways to make them tell where the valuables are kept.—New York World.

PEOPLE OF THE STAGE.

Theatrical Life Has Few Joys and Much Bitterness.

Booth, to whom Henry E. Abbey would cheerfully have paid $1,000 a night for 150 consecutive nights, was one of the most unhappy men on the face of God's earth. He had buried two wives, been through the mortification of bankruptcy and so far as worldly wealth is concerned, so far as the comforts of a settled home go, had yet to make the one and secure the other. This being the case, what do you suppose is the fate of minor people? The fact is that they work hard, are underpaid, never play the parts they prefer, pay much, by far the greater portion of their salaries, for stage costumes, invariably have a gang of hangers on who eat the bread they earn, are out of engagements most of the time and ninety times out of a hundred die so poor that they are buried at the expense of their fellows. In the first place, it is extremely difficult for them to obtain a position, and, having a position, how few its advantages. They have to rehearse at inconvenient times; they go out in all kinds of weather regardless of their health or comforts or home desires; they dress in outlandish places, either wet, damp and chilly or overheated. They are at the capricious mercy of speculative managers, and, having found by experience that there is very little sympathy for them, either before or behind the footlights, they wrap themselves in a garment of mental indifference to appearances, which is utterly misunderstood by a cynical and suspicious world.

I know of a girl who was called to a Sunday night rehearsal. Her father was very ill, but the rental of their rooms, the fees for the doctor and money for the drugs depended upon her attending to her business. It was imperative that she should be in the theater at 7:30 o'clock. Having arranged the room as women only can, having placed upon the table by the bedside of her father his medicine, she kissed him goodby and, with a loving touch, promised to be back as early as possible. You know what Sunday night rehearsals mean. They mean 1, 2, 3, 4 o'clock the next day. That is what this one meant. The girl hastened home. The candle light had gone, the cold gray of the early morning was in the room, the father was dead upon the bed.—Boston Globe.

THE SECOND DANDY CHATER

By Tom Gallon.

CHAPTER VIII.

Tells of Something Hidden in the Wood.

Philip Chater was so stunned in the first shock of the thing that he did not know what to say or do. Standing, as he did, an absolutely innocent man, he yet had time to recognize that he had taken upon himself the identity of another; and stood answerable, by reason of that, for the other's sins, in the eyes of the world, at least.

He had no doubt, in his own mind, that Dandy Chater had murdered the unfortunate girl. Her words to himself on the night of his coming to Bamberton; her reminder, to the supposed Dandy Chater, of his promise to marry her; the mysterious appointment made, for that same night, in the wood behind the mill; all these things seemed to point to but one conclusion. Again, the man running as for his life to catch the train—and without the girl; her disappearance from that hour; all these things, too, pointed, with unerring finger, to the common sordid story, ending, in an hour of desperation, in the blow which should rid the man of his burden.

These thoughts flashed rapidly through his mind, even in the few seconds which elapsed after the other man's halting declaration, and while the other man still crouched at his feet. Then the instinct of self-preservation—the desire, and the necessity, to hide that bloodstained thing, which seemed to point to him, innocent though he was, as surely in death as it would have pointed in life — swept over him. He caught the lad by the arm and dragged him to his feet; the while his mind was fiercely working, in a wild attempt to settle some plan of action. Even in that hour of danger a keen remembrance of the part he still had to play was full upon him. In his brutal roughness of voice, when he spoke, he played that part of Dandy Chater as he imagined Dandy Chater would have played it himself.

"Get up, you fool!" he cried, roughly. "Is this a time to be snivelling here? Suppose she is dead . . . . it was an accident."

Harry sadly, but doggedly, shook his head. "You won't find many to believe that, Master Dandy," he said. "She lies there, stabbed in the breast. There is a trail of blood for some yards; she must have tried to crawl away, and have bled to death. Master Dandy, can't you see that she will be found; can't you guess what they will say, and whom they will question first? All the village has linked your names for months past."

"She—it must be hidden," whispered Philip, weakly. "Heavens—man," he cried, with a sudden burst of petulant anger, "why do you stand staring like that? It may be found at any moment; it may have been found before this!"

"There's no help for it, Master Dandy," replied the other, with a groan; "it must be found, sooner or later. I tell you you must get away beyond the seas, if possible."

"And draw suspicion on myself at once!" exclaimed Philip. Then, some of the real Philip Chater coming to the surface and sweeping aside the false personality under which he lived, he added, hurriedly, "But you must have nothing to do with it, Harry; we mustn't get you into trouble. No; I'll take the thing in my own hands, and in my own fashion. Do you keep a silent tongue to every one."

"You need not fear that I shall speak, Master Dandy," replied the lad. "And it may not be so bad, after, all; you may find a way of getting out of it, Master Dandy."

"A way of getting out of it!" muttered Philip to himself, as he watched the retiring figure of his servant. "There seems but small chance of that. Robbery was bad enough, but this is another matter. She's dead, and cannot speak, even the real Dandy Chater is gone, and I stand here in his clothes, and with his very papers in my pockets. Philip, my boy, keep a cool head—for this business means death!"

Some morbid attraction, no less than the necessity for doing something with the body, urged him to see it. But, here again, the bitterness and the strangeness of his position came strongly upon him; for, though he stood in deadly peril of being charged with the murder of this girl, he was actually ignorant of the spot where her body lay. He shuddered at the thought that he might stumble upon it at any step he took. Still casting about in his mind for the best method of finding the place he went back to the Hall, and resolved to fortify himself with dinner before doing anything.

"I suppose if I really had murder on my soul I should have no appetite, unless I was a hardened villain indeed. Being innocent, I'll make the best of things until they come to the worst."

With this wise resolution he dined well, and drank an excellent bottle of wine. The world beginning to look a little better in direct consequence, he lit a cigar, and put the matter philosophically before himself.

"Men have been hung, I know, on slighter evidence than that which connects me with the dead girl. Yet, after all"—he derived very considerable satisfaction from the remembrance of this point—"I am not Dandy Chater, and never was. If I can only as readily persuade people that I am not my twin brother as I have persuaded them that I am, I've nothing to fear."

Knowing the impossibility of doing anything alone, by reason of ignorance of the neighborhood, he rang the bell and requested that Harry might be sent to him. In a few moments the servant who had answered the summons returned, and, standing just within the door, announced that Harry was not to be found.

"What do you mean?" asked Philip. "Look about for him, man; he must be somewhere about the place."

"Begging your pardon, sir," replied the man, "'e 'as been seen leavin' the grounds a little while since."

"Very well, it doesn't matter," said Philip, carelessly. "Send him to me when he returns."

The man withdrew, leaving Philip Chater in an uneasy frame of mind. He saw at once that, great as this lad's devotion might be to Dandy Chater, he had already, in a moment of passion, defied his master. He was scarcely more than a boy, and in that boy's hands hung the life of Philip Chater. That he was to have gone out, in this fashion, without word, was a circumstance suspicious enough at any time; that he should have done so now was alarming in the extreme to the man who dreaded every moment to hear unaccustomed sounds in the house, which should denote that the secret of the wood was a secret no longer, and that men had come to take him.

"I can't stay here; I shall go mad if I do," said Philip to himself. "After all, there may be only a few hours of liberay left for me—perhaps only a few minutes. Come, what shall I do with the time?"

A certain recklessnes was upon the man—the recklessness will make a man laugh sometimes in the certain approach of death. With that feeling, too, came a softer one; in that hour of difficulty and danger he turned, as it were, toward the woman who had kissed him—the woman who had whispered that she loved him. In his bitter loneliness, as as been said, his thoughts had turned to her more often than was good for his peace of mind; and now a longing greater than he could master came upon him to touch her hand—perhaps, by great good fortune, her lips—once again.

"Who knows—it may be for the last time!" he said. "There has not been so much of tenderness or beauty in my life that I can afford to throw it churlishly aside when it is given to freely to me. Madge, my sweet girl, this vagabond, thieving, murdering masquerading lover of yours is coming to see you."

With that lighter, better mood upon him he sought for the piece of paper on which the plan had been drawn, and traced the paths by which he should reach the cottage. He found, as he had anticipated, that it was within some 200 or 300 yards of his own lodge gates.

But before he reached the terrace he heard an exclamation, and from out the shadow of some trees a figure came swiftly toward him. For a moment he hesitated, and half drew back; but the figure came nearer, and he saw that it was Madge Barnshaw. In his great relief, and in his gladness at that time to see her friendly face and her eyes giving him welcome, he took her silently in his arms and kissed her.

"Dear Dandy," she said—and her voice was very low and soft—"how I have longed to see you!"

"No more, dear heart, than I to see you," he replied. "But I—I have been very busy; so many things have occupied my attention—so many things have needed to—to be done. Why, what a poor lover you must think me!"

"Indeed, no," she said. "Only I feared . . . . such a foolish thought, I know . . . . I feared that something might be wrong with you; feared that you might be in danger. Dandy"—she was twisting a button on his coat round and round in her fingers, and her eyes were bent down so that he could not see them—"you remember once a long talk we had about—about your cousin, Mr. Ogledon, don't you?"

He did not, of course, remember it, for an obvious reason; but, as he was desirous of hearing as much as possible about that gentleman, he answered diplomatically.

"Well, what about him?"

"Dandy—dear old boy—I don't want you to think that I am uncharitable, or that this is a mere woman's whim. You remember that you were very angry with me when last I spoke about him; you said——"

"I promise that you shall not make me angry this time—no matter what you say about him," broke in Philip, gently.

She raised her head quickly, and looked at him for a moment or two in silence. "Dandy," she said at last, looking at him strangely, "you have never been so good to me as you are to-night; never seemed so near to me. That old impatience of yours seems to be gone. Something has softened you; what is it?"

"Perhaps it is my love for you, dear Madge," he said; and, indeed, he thought then that the love of her might have softened any man.

"Do you think so?" she asked, smiling at him happily. "And you will promise not to be angry at anything I say?"

"Most faithfully."

"Well, then, I mistrust that man. I think a woman sees deeper into the hearts of her fellow-creatures than a man can hope to do; perhaps it is God's gift to her for her greater protection. The world is a sweet and precious place to me, especially since we have been drawn so mush more strongly together, you and I; but I say from my heart that it would be a better place if that man were dead."

He looked at her in some astonishment. A rising tide of passion had flushed her face and drawn her figure more erect.

Yet, how he longed at that time to tell her how true he believed her words to be! How he longed to fall at her feet, and tell her that the man to whom her heart had been given had been unworthy of it; that he was dead, and that another stood in his place ready to take his place in a yet greater sense! But he knew that that was impossible; only in his heart was growing up a dreadful, insane jealousy of the man who was dead.

"Where is he now?" she asked suddenly, after a little pause.

"I haven't the faintest idea," replied Philip, carelessly. "Come, surely we have something better to talk about than Cousin Ogledon. See, the moon is rising—the moon that calls to lovers all the world over to worship him, and swear by him. What shall I swear to you, dear Madge?"

"Swear first of all," she said, still with that note of anxiety in her voice, "swear that you will have as little as possible to do with that man. Ah! do let me speak"—this as he was about to interrupt her. "I know, only too well, that I have reason for my anxiety. Come, if you love me, Dandy, dear, promise me that you will have as little——"

"Indeed, I'll promise you that, with a light heart," exclaimed Philip. And, indeed, he had small desire to have anything at all to do with Mr Ogledon.

"Thank you, dear boy—than you!" she exclaimed, gratefully. "That's quite like that newer, better self which you promised I should see in you. There"—she bent forward and kissed him lightly—"that in token that the matter is ended between us. Now, what shall we do? The moon is rising, as you say, and I don't want to go inside yet; Miss Vint playes propriety, and never understands when she is in the way."

"We certainly don't want Miss Vint," said Philip, with a laugh, for a little time, at least, and talk."

After pacing up and down the garden once or twice they stopped, side by side, at a little gate which opened from the farther corner of its somewhat limited extent. As the girl laid her hand upon it Philip inwardly wondered where it led. She swung it open, quite as a matter of course, and as though that had been a favorite walk of her own and her lover's, and they passed through into a sort of little plantation. The moon was high and the sky clear; their own shadows, and those of the trees, were sharp and distinct upon the ground. Still almost in silence, save for an occasional word, they passed on, side by side, until the gate was far behind them.

FIRE RANGERS OF CANADA.

Millions of Dollars' Worth of Timber Saved Through Their Labors.

The Canadian fire ranger goes into the woods about May 1 and stays till Oct. 1. Two men are always sent together as partners—usually a young man and one of middle age. Their duties are: First, to locate and "run" the boundary lines of the domain, blazing the way on trees and opening trails; then they must "travel" the tract once so often, placing on conspicuous trees along the trails and portages the government signs, printed on linen, warning against the reckless building of fires and containing the definite rules to be observed.

They are supposed to keep watch of camping parties and people journeying through the tract, to see that these rules are obeyed and that the game laws are not transgressed. In dry weather every part of the limit must be visited within a certain number of days. When the weather is wet the duties are not arduous, for at such times the forest will take care of itself.

Millions of dollars, by means of this supervision of forests, have been saved to the dominion of Canada and to the individual owners of its vast stretches of timber. To the lover of nature traveling through the "silent places" the fire ranger's camp or shack is always a haven of welcome for the lonely watchman of the forest never fails to bid you share the shelter of his roof and partake with him of his wholesome fare.

Then He Skipped.

"You don't seem to have noticed the dog in the back yard," remarked Mrs Hauskeep, coldly.

"No," replied the nervy tramp, "that don't bother me. Yer see, I'm attached to dogs—"

"Yes? Well, you'd better get out of here in a hurry or this dog will be attached to you."

OUR other years have slipped away, as slips away the flower in its sheath.
Once more with hands held out we grasp a gift the Father sends,
And give Him thanks for length of days, for joy that comes with breath,
For home and books and happy
work, for children and for friends.

All in the midnight and the frost we sped the old year out;
All in the daylight and the glow we bid the New Year in!
The king is dead! Long live the king!—'tis aye the clamorous shout;
And ever 'tis with mirth and hope
the new-born reigns begin.

What yet may wait of care or grief today
we cannot tell.
Another year, another start, another chance to do
What lieth closest to our hand: God loves us, all is well.
Disdaining fear, we greet the year, whose first white leaves are new.

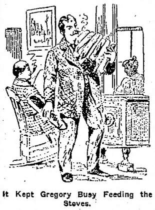
A NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

I had known Gregory in the states. He was an A No. 1 young fellow, and we had worked side by side for three years a tthe same desk in a little wholesale house in Iowa. How Gregory ever happened to leave Canada and find his way to Iowa is too long and too dull a story to tell, but he did find his way there, and soon after he arrived we became great chums.

He sang in the choir, made out the bills of the concern for which we worked, rode horseback, and had boils. Of the four occupations, the boils seemed to interest him most, and no wonder, for they were with him night and day.

He used to back up to me and say: "Look at my neck, will you, old fellow, and see if that spot looks like a boil?" Usually it did.



It Kept Gregory Busy Feeding the Stoves.

We all used to advise him what to do for them, and he did it. Our desk drawers were always full of his tonics and lotions and salves; and when anyone pulled one of his special drawers open an odor like an apothecary shop escaped.

But all this has nothing to do with my story.

When Gregory was called back to Canada he made me promise to visit him at Sutton-West some time. He said it was the most beautiful spot in the world, and that it had a climate as much superior to ours here in Iowa as gold to lead.

So when I found I was to have two weeks' vacation during the Christmas holidays in '93, I wrote him that I was coming. His reply to my letter was enthusiastic. The weather was superb, the sleighing excellent, a pretty cousin was visiting them. Come right along, and he had a big corbuncle on his arm.

So I went.

To get to Sutton you go through Toronto and up a little branch railway, and from Sutton you drive several miles to Sutton-West along the shore of Lake Simcoe.

Gregory met me at the station and wrapped me well in robes. A servant drove. Gregory explained that he would have handled the ribbons himself had he been able, but, owing to I enjoyed the first half of the ride, but the last half was decidedly cold. It seems that they had had a change of weather and were now having a genuine Canadian winter.

The place, which they called Old Sotherwood, fronted on the lake, and was a rambling old building in the real his carbuncle, he was obliged to carry his arm in a sling. He was downright glad to see me, and asked questions all the way to Sutton-West, about the old friends in Iowa.
English style.

There were fourteen rooms and they kept thirteen stoves in continual action. The room without a stove was an extra room in the attic and was used for a store room. Gregory said that all the men turned out in the fall and hauled wood, and then when snow fell all began chopping, and chopped until time to plant in the spring.

It kept Gregory busy feeding the stoves. He would fill up number one, and then fill number two, and so on, and by the time he had number 13 stoked he would be ready to load number one again, and sometimes he would not be able to get around in time and the fire in number one would be out before he had number 13 full of wood.

The front door was completely snowed up, buried behind a twenty-foot drift, and Gregory told me it was a lucky thing, for if it had not been and any one should have opened the front and rear doors at the same time the lake breeze would have blown the whole unlucky 13 stoves out of the house and clear down to Toronto. That lake breeze was what they called "bracing weather" up there. Down in Iowa we would have locked ourselves indoors and said: "What a fearful blizzard!"

And they seemed to enjoy it. The girl cousin, Maud Gregory, did not mind it in the least, and would take her skates and sail out for a little spin on the ice on days when I was wondering whether we had not better tie the house to the pine trees to keep it from blowing away.

But then she was acustomed to it. She had never been farther South than Toronto, and frequently spent her winters there on Lake Simcoe.

She was a beautiful girl, too. I saw that the first time I met her, and I saw it more plainly every day.

By the time I had grown a little accustomed to the beautiful climate we were quite good friends, and as Gregory's carbuncle practically confined him to the smoking room, the pleasure of escorting her on her numerous skating trips naturally fell to me. And I did not shirk my duty.

She was an only child, and her father was a clerk in one of the Toronto banks, the Commerce, and Maud was very desirous of helping him by securing a position as stenographer somewhere. She had taken a course in a school, and felt herself well equipped for the position, but so far she had not secured it.

Of course, her aunt laughed at her. So did Gregory, too, for that matter, for she had been quite a society girl and both predicted she would be picked up and married off before she even got a place as stenographer. I thought so myself.

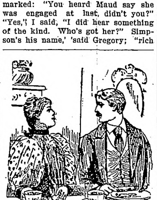
I remember it was the last day of '93 that I was sitting in the smoking room, and all the others were in the next room (which they called the "warm room" because it wasn't quite as cold as the others) when the next mail came. Gregory brought me a letter from the "boss," and I was reading it when I heard Maud say in her quiet way: "Auntie, I may as well tell you, I am engaged!"

Then I heard Mrs. Gregory get up and go over and kiss Maud, and as I don't like to overhear conversations meant for other ears I went up to my room and stoked up the fire.

I may as well own that I was cut up quite a little, for I had begun to like Maud a little too well for my own comfort, and, while I had no real hope of ever winning her, it was rather a shock to learn that she was actually engaged, and that I was to have no chance at all.

I pulled out my writing material with a jerk, and answered the letter I had reecived in a pretty bad mood, and then smoked a pipe and read a bit, and before I knew it it was late.

Gregory came in and sat on the bed awhile and talked about a curling match that was to come off the next day, and then he incidentally remarked: "You heard Maud say she was engaged at last, didn't you?" "Yes," I said, "I did hear something of the kind. Who's got her?" Simpson's his name,' 'said Gregory; "rich old fellow, runs a furniture factory in Toronto."



"You Certainly Did Not Propose to Him?"

"Oh!" I said.

Then Gregory left, and I pulled out my note book. I took a new leaf and set about writing some resolutions for '94. I do it every year—and usually I keep them. This time I thought for quite awhile before I could think of any reforming I needed, and at length I gave it up and simply wrote: "Resolved: That I will be a bachelor all my life."

Then I shut the book and went to bed and naturally dreamed of Maud. You see how far gone I was.

The next morning we were all at breakfast when some one introduced the subject of Maud's engagement.

"You are the only one to neglect to congratulate me, Mr. Butler," she said, feigning offense.

"But I do congratulate you, Miss Maud," I said sincerely, "and I hope your engagement may lead to nothing but happiness for you."

"Oh! it will!" she said. "If you knew Mr. Simpson, you could not doubt it. He is the kindest man. He is just the man I should have picked of all the men I know."

"Indeed! I imagined that you did choose him, in a way? In such a matter one usually—"

"Of course," she said, "I chose him, but still it lay with him, too, for without his consent—"

"His consent!" I cried.

"Why, yes," she said, "he had to accept me before—"

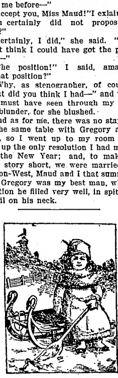
"Accept you, Miss Maud!" I exlaimed. "You certainly did not propose to him?"

"Certainly, I did," she said. "You don't think I could have got the position—"

"The position!" I said, amazed. "What position?"

"Why, as stenographer, of course What did you think I had—" and then she must have seen through my stupid blunder, for she blushed.

And as for me, there was no staying at the same table with Gregory after that, so I went up to my room and tore up the only resolution I had made for the New Year; and, to make a long story short, we were married at Sutton-West, Maud and I that summer, and Gregory was my best man, which position he filled very well, in spite of a boil on his neck.



TO THE OLD YEAR.

Good-by, Old Year!
While others ring
The New Year in, and loudly sing
Of what delight and pace 'twill bring,
Ere the tolling of the bell
To the world soundeth thy death-knell,
I bid thee now a fond farewell—
Good-by, Old Year!

Good-by, Old Year!
While others raise
To thy successor hymns of praise,
I'll thank thee for the by-gone days.
Many a blessing hast thou brought,
Many a sacred truth has taught;
Fruitful changes have been wrought
By thee, Old Year.

Good-by, Old year!
Should I alone
Remember thee when thou art gone,
I'll thank thee for the good thou'st done.
The world forgets the absent friend;
To each new-comer doth it bend,
And casts it off when near the end,
Like thee, Old Year.

Good-by, Old Year!
Dost thou forget
How men with joy thy advent met?
That praise the New Year hath; but yet
When once again its reign is o'er,
The world, it may be, as before,
Will leave to me to say once more,
Good-by, Old Year!

Windsor an Expensive Castle.

No royal castle has cost the nation more in hard cash than that of Windsor, says the London Chronicle.

When George IV. announced his intention of making it a family residence parliament granted him £300,000 toward its reconstruction. For four years the work went merrily on under fresh grants, and the king then took possession of the private apartments. This did not end the expenditure, however.

By the time William IV. had satisfied himself that there was nothing more to be done the castle had swallowed up close to a million pounds.

Terror Turned Their Hair White.

It has been repeatedly affirmed that Queen Marie Antoinette's auburn hair turned white in the days of the reign of terror, and an English surgeon named Parry states that just after the Indian mutiny he actually saw the jet black hair of a rebel Sepoy, who was under examination and feared a dreadful death, turn white in the course of half an hour. In the time of the Commune in Paris the dark hair of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild was blanched in a few hours.—The Caledonian.

Fooling the Missouri Farmer.

A clever rogue is living off the farmers of Chariton county, Missouri. He comes to a farmhouse at night and asks for lodging. The next day he prolongs his stay. He gets chummy with the farmer. He knows so many stories, so much lore and so many fiddle tunes that his stay lengthens into a month or so imperceptibly. When he begins to wear out his welcome he floats away and gladdens some other happy home.

A Bright Boy.

The commercial traveler was in a hurry to catch his train, says "Chums." In the hall of the hotel he suddenly called up a page boy.

"Here, boy!" he shouted, "run to room 48 and see whether I have left a box on the chair. But be quick, as I have only five minutes."

The boy rushed up the stairs. In two or three minutes he returned, out of breath.

"Yes, sir," he panted, "you left it, sir."

He Knew.

"My boy, here's the place for you Hours from 10 to 2; Saturdays from 10 to 12; work genteel and light; experience unnecessary; salary, $100 per week. How does that suit you?"

"G'wan! I ain't got no $50,000 to invest in the business."—Houston Chronicle.

Bachelors Must Wear Skirts.

A Great Outside Remedy.

Most pains are of local origin—a "crick" in the back, a twinge of rheumatism, a soreness all over arising from a cold—are all cured by outside applications. The quickest, safest and most certain method is Allcock's Plaster, known the world over as a universal remedy for pain. They never fail, they act promptly, they are clean and cheap. You can go right ahead with your work while the healing process goes on. Sixty years' use has given them a great reputation.

Reversing It.

The meek and lowly tramp meandered up to the old farm gate and asked for a raw turnip with which to appease his hunger.

But the horny-handed son of toil was onto his job, and all the hobo got was a turndown.

ARALEE

By MRS. B. M. CROKER

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

India! What a glorious vision was summoned by that word! and when it was suggested as my future home, I accepted the proffered invitation, and sailed eastward—the bride of a clever young civil engineer.

Our home was a comfortable white bungalow in excellent repair. It stood between the ruins of an old fort, and a large building enclosed by a high wall, over which waved the tops of palms and tulip-trees.

"That was once the Residency," explained Mr. Bethune, a young friend of my husband's who came occasionally to see us. "I believe it has wonderful grounds full of mangoes and tamarind trees. Think of such waste! Now it belongs to a rich zemindar—a Brahmin—who shuts himself up with his belongings to the fourth generation, and keeps a temple and a priest. I am sorry you have not better neighbors!"

"Perhaps we may become friendly," I answered. "I should like to see an Indian household."

"You will never do that here. These west-coast Brahmins are extraordinarily strict. They have it all their own way in these parts, and look on Europeans as the mud under their feet."

One day I rode into our compound just at noon. The house was under a spell of noontide quiet—only a wandering wind from the sea stirred the heavy palms, and rustled among the jack-fruit. I happened to glance in passing at a large fig-tree overhanging the wall which enclosed the zemindar's domain; there, shining among the green leaves like a flower, I descried a white face—the face of a girl of my own age. "It must be imagination," I said to myself, not a little startled.

I looked up again; yes, it was still there—a colorless, beautiful face framed in quantities of soft golden hair. The vision was about to withdraw, but I held up my hand with a gesture of entreaty.

"Oh, don't go!" I implored. "I've not seen a white woman for three months. Please stay, and tell me what you are doing in there."

"I—I was a-watching for a-you," she answered, speaking with peculiar deliberation, as if English were an unfamiliar tongue; "I do watch to see you every day when they"—and she jerked her head backward—"are asleep—after food."

"Who are they?"

"People in here—where I live—always."

"But surely you are a European?—they are natives," I objected.

"My mother was a native; of Nair caste—a Brahmin woman; these are her folk."

"Do you like being shut up?"

"No!" she answered quickly. "Oh, you are so young and happy, and free—it makes me glad to look at you!"

"But you must come and look at me here, at home. I shall be thankful for your company. I have many lonely hours."

"I also. But no, no, no—I can never go to you."

"How old are you," I questioned.

"Sixteen, I think."

"You look older; and your name?"

"Aralee they call me—my father's name was Nemo."

"And where is he?"

"I wish I knew! He left this seven years ago. He may be dead—like my mother—but something says No. Every day I watch for him—and every night I pray that he may soon return," and tears rolled down her face.

"Perhaps he will. Do you know anything of him?"

"Not much. Since I was small, I can recall him here. He bought this bungalow—it is his—and he spent much time here, and in the forests. From him I learned English, and when he was laid up with a broken leg he taught me to read. Oh, I did love him! and I rode on a pony by his side, and he told me tales of fairies. How happy I was! Then he was called away to England—and has never come back. After a long while my Uncle Narayana came to live here, then my mother died, and—that is my life."

"I want to do something for you," I cried. "Can I not come to see you?"

"Well, I tell you something. In three days Narayana, the zemindar, and most of his mankind, go to the great yearly festival, to bathe and to offer sacrifice. He will be away about two or three weeks. You go and see Ravi his wife, and the womenfolk—talk and flatter and please—wear all your jewels—and then she will let you speak to Aralee. Now, there is your chance!"

What a tale I had to relate to Robbie that evening!

You can imagine that I lost no time in putting Aralee's plan into execution and dispatched a herald the next day to inquire if the ladies would receive a visit from me. I did not mention the project to Robbie; and I could not help laughing aloud, as I arrayed myself for my afternoon call.

The courtyard next door was disappointing—squalid, not to say dirty, full of natives, and sleek white cattle, carts, ploughs, palanquins and noisome odors. I noticed a temple, in which was a frightful squat figure of an idol, daubed with red and reeking with rancid ghee. Indoors, all was dim; there was a dense atmosphere of oil and incense; faded garlands hung in doorways, and many eyes watched me stealthily as I passed into the presence of Ravi.

Ravi—a stout, youngish woman—was seated crosslegged on a string bed; her hair was adorned with gold, her arms with many bangles, her nose and ears with jeweled rings. She wore a rich orange silk saree (the Brahmin color), and was evidently pleased at my visit. The ayah interpreted with volubility, and many women listened to our conversation. She asked my age, number of my children, my husband's income, what I paid my servants, and why we came to Ahnomore? She plied me with childish questions about England, and examined and tried on all my ornaments one by one. I presented the amber beads, and casually, before leaving, preferred my request that the girl who lived with her might now and then spend a day with me, as I was so lonely.

"Of a truth, I see no harm," she answered, "for she mopes, and grows thin and ugly; but she must see no men. Promise that, by your God, and our gods."

"No men, except my husband," I amended.

After long whispering and discussion I gained my point, and departed in high glee, and high, I flattered myself, in the estimation of my hostess.

Aralee duly appeared the next morning, conveyed in a closed palanquin When she stepped out, I saw that she was unexpectedly tall and slim. She looked half frightened, and as I took her hand and kissed her, her eyes were brimming with tears.

"Oh, you are good!" she whispered, "and make me so, so happy!"

It was pitifully easy to please and entertain the poor girl; everything she saw was a novelty and a delight! Aralee informed me that she had read a good deal. She told me that she feared to forget the English tongue, and when she paced the garden alone she often talked it aloud to herself. The girl had but one friend—her old ayah; and her future was an ever-haunting horror. Narayana, her uncle, was acquainted with a rich Rajah who, alas! had heard of her.

She had no parents or friends; and these very pretty young girls are much valued by the Rajahs in their zenanas.

"Sooner than accept that life, I will kill myself," she declared. "The ayah knows of an end, both swift and sure."

"Do not say such dreadful things, Aralee," I remonstrated; "there is no fear—we will protect you."

"Ah, you do not understand my uncle! He is immovable as a stone, and as secret as the sea!"

I had once seen Narayana, the zemindar—a tall, stately person, with high-bred features, a pale, wheaten-colored skin, and piercing eyes. His mien was impassive, his air aloof and forbidding.

Aralee talked of her father, and his passion for sport. He had evidently gained the poor child's heart. His memory still burned brightly, in spite of absence and silence. With respect to her mother, she told me that she was beautiful as a lotus flower, but that of late years she had wept much, and faded and faded away. People said she died of a decline.

Thanks to little gifts and civil messages, Ravi, the zemindar's wife, accorded me the company of her niece day after day. Robbie, who had been duly introduced to my treasure trove, was amazed at her beauty; but as she was painfully shy in his society, and scarcely lifted her eyes or opened her lips, he thought her dull.

"Her face is the face of an English girl," he remarked, "but her mind is oriental. Her soul is asleep."

Remembering my solemn promise, I never sent for Aralee when there was any prospect of a visit from Mr. Bethune; and, marvellous to relate, I did not tell him one word about my new friend. To keep such a heavy secret was to me pain and grief,. but something at the back of my mind enforced this silence. He was a dear, impulsive, warm-hearted boy—she was forlorn and lovely.

But what will be, will be! Archie Bethune had a sharp attack of malaria, and Robbie dispatched him straight to our bungalow, in order to be nursed.

He arrived early one afternoon, to discover Aralee sitting with me in the west veranda. So they met—fate had taken the matter out of my hands. Although the young people had made acquaintance in the most unexpected manner, and their conversation was of a prosaic and commonplace description, yet the stinging little question kept buzzing in my brain—"What would Narayana, the zemindar, say?" And for once I was unaffectedly thankful to welcome the heavy old green palanquin, which was to transport my visitor home. The four bearers and the stalwart peon beheld the well-matched pair with lowering and suspicious eyes; their faces grew dark as young Bethune escorted the girl down the steps, and, handing her into the dhooly, said, "Good-bye, I hope we shall meet again soon!"

Undoubtedly these words were the embodiment of her death warrant, for this was the last time we ever saw the beautiful pale face, that nodded and smiled, as the clumsy palanquin rocked away.

As soon as young Bethune was convalescent, and had gone back to his own little tent, I dispatched my usual note next door. It was returned unopened, with a brief message, "The Missy was gone!" Gone where? We never discovered; a dead impassive silence was the sole answer to every inquiry. The great studded gates were shut fast; Narayana, the zemindar, had returned from his devotions, and retired within his borders. There is nothing in this world so impenetrable as a Brahmin's household!

DISFIGURING SKIN HUMOR.

Impossible to Get Employment, as Face and Body Were Covered With Sores—Cured by Cuticura.

"Since the year 1894 I have been troubled with a very bad case of eczema, which I have spent hundreds of dollars trying to cure, and I went to the hospital, but they failed to cure me, and it was getting worse all the time. Five weeks ago my wife bought a box of Cuticura Ointment, and one cake of Cuticura Soap, and I am pleased to say that I am now completely cured and well. It was impossible for me to get employment, as my face, head and body were covered with it. The eczema first appeared on the top of my head, and it had worked all the way around down the back of my neck and around to my throat, down my body and around the hips. It itched so I would be obliged to scratch it, and the flesh was raw. I am now all well, and I will be pleased to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all persons who wish a speedy and permanent cure of skin diseases." Thomas M. Rossiter, 290 Prospect Street, East Orange, N. J.

ROUTS HER FATHER'S CARES.

Miss Helen Cannon, Devoted Daughter and Amiable Hostess.

One of the most amiable of hostesses is Miss Helen Cannon, except when she meets somebody who has had the temerity to utter even a whisper against some public action of her father, the speaker of the house. Oh! the scorn that will be visited upon that too-daring representative by Uncle Joe's daughter. The speaker has been a widower for many years, and his daughter has devoted herself to his welfare. When he comes home fagged out she knows just how to get him in good trim, and no engagement, however important, can make her leave home if she thinks he is in need of her care. Her principal method to banish dull care is the game of cribbage. The speaker loves the game, and the more excited he becomes the more Miss Cannon rejoices at that sure token he is forgetting his cares. His wrath when she beats him, she says, is the best tonic in the world.

Senator Penrose, at the dedication of Pennsylvania's splendid capitol at Harrisburg, said of a certain speech that had been made at a private dinner before the dedicatory ceremonies:

"That speech was pregnant with meaning. It revealed in every sentence its author's character. Brief and full and illuminating, it reminded me of the beautiful young lady who murmured to herself one afternoon, as she paused uncertainly on a street corner:

BAD BLOOD
THE SOURCE OF ALL DISEASE

Every part of the body is dependent on the blood for nourishment and strength. When this life stream is flowing through the system in a state of purity and richness we are assured of perfect and uninterrupted health; because pure blood is nature's safe-guard against disease. When, however, the body is fed on weak, impure or polluted blood, the system is deprived of its strength, disease germs collect, and the trouble is manifested in various ways. Pustular eruptions, pimples, rashes and the different skin affections show that the blood is in a feverish and diseased condition as a result of too much acid or the presence of some irritating humor. Sores and Ulcers are the result of morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood, and Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., are all deep-seated blood disorders that will continue to grow worse as long as the poison remains. These impurities and poisons find their way into the blood in various ways. Often a sluggish, inactive condition of the system, and torpid state of the avenues of bodily waste, leaves the refuse and waste matters to sour and form uric and other acids, which are taken up by the blood and distributed throughout the circulation. Coming in contact with contagious diseases is another cause for the poisoning of the blood; we also breathe the germs and microbes of Malaria into our lungs, and when these get into the blood in sufficient quantity it becomes a carrier of disease instead of health. Some are so unfortunate as to inherit bad blood, perhaps the dregs of some old constitutional disease of ancestors is handed down to them and they are constantly annoyed and troubled with it. Bad blood is the source of all disease, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and purified the body is sure to suffer in some way. For blood troubles of any character S. S. S. is the best remedy ever discovered. Delinquent personal property tax payers who have moved out of the county in which their tax was levied are, under the new code, no longer safe from prosecution. In the new laws it is provided that it shall be the duty of the auditor of the county in which a delinquent tax is recorded to notify the clerk of court of the county in which the taxpayer lives and the clerk shall then furnish a warrant to the sheriff, who in turn must serve it and levy upon the property owner's goods the same as if the tax is due in his own county.

WEDDED AT ST. THOMAS.

A St. Thomas correspondent says: In the Christmas week, at the home of the bride's parents occurred a very pretty wedding, when Mr. Scot Cameron Hall and Miss Clara Jean Pearce were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by the Rev. L. B. Crosby. The parlor was prettily decorated with roses, holly and evergreen. At high noon the song "Beloved, It is Morn," was rendered in a very happy manner, and immediately afterward, to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Beatrice Emard, the niece of the groom, the bride entered the room on the arm of her father and met the groom under an arch of roses, white ribbons and evergreen erected for the occasion. The bride was attired in cream white silk and carried a beautiful white prayer book presented by Rt. Rev. Father Arsenault, and was attended by Miss Winnefred Schulthorp, the little niece of the bride, who acted as ring bearer. After the words were pronounced which made them husband and wife the congratulations were poured upon the happy couple to to the strains of triumphant music, after which the guests were invited to a dining room where they partook of a bountiful wedding dinner. The bride has been assistant postmistress of St. Thomas for the past eighteen months, and the groom is a well known railroad man from Crookston. They will make their future home at Crookston, and are followed by a host of good wishes from their many friends.—Grand Forks Herald.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

DECISION IN COUNTY SEAT FIGHT EXPECTED FRIDAY

Supreme Court Will Give Opinion on Case—Red Lake Falls People Confident.

There will probably be a decision handed down by the supreme court at St. Paul on the County Seat fight tomorrow. The question to be decided by the court is as to the legality of holding an election for the removal of the county seat from Red Lake Falls to Thief River Falls.

Attorneys for both sides feel confident of a favorable decision, as do people who are well posted in the matter, and in view of former decisions in cases of a like nature, it is reasonably certain that the court will find for Red Lake Falls.

While there is nothing definite on which to base a prediction of the result of the decision, it is well known that the supreme court has in the past been loathe to change a county seat unless there was shown a better reason than exists in the present case. The cost of such a removal would be borne greatly by those to whom the least benefit would come by the change—the farmers—and as most cases of this kind are the outcome of the ambitions of a few men, the courts have been of the opinion that changes of county seats are not desirable, even when there is apparently good reason.

The decision is awaited with confidence by both attorneys in Red Lake Falls, and will undoubtedly be favorable.

WHEN A DOLLAR'S NOT A DOLLAR.

New York Justice Could Barely Live on $17,500 a Year.

An honored judge of New York's supreme court announces his resignation, after twenty years on the bench, to engage in the practice of law. He feels, as he frankly explains, that before age impairs his energies he should make reasonable provision for his family and for his own declining years—which he cannot do on the bench for the salary is only $17,500 a year.

This will sound like a joke to many who live in places where a dollar is still the unit of the currency system and will buy something worth carrying home. They have not yet experienced that singular monetary mutability—one of the most important, certainly, of all the phenomena of currency, yet one which all learned writers on the subject ignore—whereby the unit shrinks about in proportion to the density of the population. Thus, the Posey County dollar becomes only eighty cents in Indianapolis and a half-dollar in Chicago, while in the glare of Broadway it contracts to the proportion of a dime—not really current for commercial purposes, but good only to give to the waiter. Out in the country, where money is still money, $17,500 a year looks like a fortune. The New York justice, an eminently good and wise man, finds that it means only board and lodging. This monetary law ought to be better understood. It would show that attractive "city job" in a true and less alluring light.—Saturday Evening Post.

Charles Cruze, who has been in the employ of Louis Sieff at Billings, Mont., returned to Red Lake Falls, Tuesday. He says Montana is the coming state.

GYMNASIUM RE-OPENED.

The boys have re-opened the gymnasium for the balance of the winter. The membership is composed of a majority of those who at one time were connected with the Red Lake Falls Athletic association. The boys have a complete outfit and should pull off some good "stunts" during the season. This will also keep the boys in good physical condition to carry on the summer sports.

To Keep the Salton Sea.

Now that the flow of the Colorado river into the so-called "Salton Sea" has been stopped, the dwellers in the surrounding region are beginning to realize that, although the indefinite increase of the lake would have meant ruin to them, its existance in a stationary form is in many ways a benefit, They are therefore talking of methods of maintaining it at its present size. It is a well known fact that golden grain belt beer is the ideal table beverage. Take a glass before each meal and you will not have to deprive yourself of the things you like to eat. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

TRAVELING A SUCCESS.

Sam E. Hunt, who is now on the road as a representative of the Marshall-Wells Hardware Co., Duluth, was in town over Sunday and says he had a very successful trip. He will be at home every Sunday for the next few months, after which his territory will be extended. Sam is certainly the one who can "show 'em."

DIRECTORS' ELECTION.

At a meeting of the officers of the First State Bank, Tuesday, the following directors were elected:

Chas. N. Bourdon, A. P. Toupin, W. A. Schrieter, Theo. Garceau, F. E. Hunt, N. M. Watson, G. F. Hennings.

M. W. A. ENTERTAIN.

A Large Crowd Take Advantage of Social Given By Woodmen.

The Modern Woodmen of this city gave a social for the entertainment of the wives and sweethearts of its members Tuesday evening at their hall. While this was a Woodman affair, those who wished to gain admittance were not turned away for the mere fact of not being members of the organization. The result was that the hall was taxed to its utmost capacity and a thoroughly good time was participated in by those present.

Supper was served at Mrs. M. V. Hall's restaurant.

Too much praise cannot be given the committee having charge of the entertainment. They certainly showed themselves capable of engineering such things and those who attended hope that they will not be satisfied with their effort this time, but will give another social in the near future.

BAND LEADER ARRIVES.

Band Held First Practice Under New Leader Tuesday Night.

Prof. Emil E. Bruckman, the long looked-for leader for the Red Lake Falls band, arrived in the city Monday morning from New York. Mr. Bruckman is a pupil of the old school, and at the first practice held under his direction Tuesday evening he demonstrated that he understood music thoroughly and is capable of conducting the band. Mr. Bruckman is a clarionetist and violinist and will take charge of the orchestra in case he stays here, which at present seems an assured fact. It is his intention to secure pupils and commence a school of instruction in music.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

GANS WINS IN EIGHTH ROUND

HERMAN, CLEARLY OUTCLASSED, NEVER HAD A CHANCE WITH THE NEGRO.

IS CLEANLY KNOCKED OUT

DROPS LIKE LOG AND IT TAKES THREE MINUTES TO REVIVE HIM.

Tonopah, Nev. Jan. 3.—After playing with Herman for eight rounds. Champion Joe Gans landed a full swing on the point of Herman's jaw and Chicago's favorite went to the mat a beaten man.

It was apparent from the start that Herman had no chance. Gans blocked his blows with the greatest of ease. and at no time was Gans worried in the least. In the first round Joe started to feel things out. Herman was willing to fight, but the champion stalled him off.

Gans Opens Up.

In the second round Gans started to open up. Herman's attempts to land all ended in failure.

The third and fourth rounds were repetitions of the second. In the fifth rounds, Gans having measured his man, slowed down. This was the only round where Herman made any showing. The sixth and seventh rounds were all Gans'. In the eighth Gans started out by feinting and drawing Herman's fire. They fiddled around the ring until Gans worked his opponent into a corner.

Drops Like a Log.

Gans feinted with his left and Herman swung wildly with his left. He left an opening. Like a flash Gans whipped left and then a swinging right flush on the point of Herman's jaw. Herman dropped like a log and three minutes elapsed before he revived.

Herman was outclassed throughout. He never had a chance, and he will never have a chance when he meets a man of Gans' caliber.

BLOCK SYSTEM IS A FARCE

HAS NOT ADDED TO SAFETY OF TRAVEL—FIFTY-THREE PERSONS DEAD.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Entirely independent of any whitewashing investigation which the Baltimore & Ohio may make of the criminality which caused the loss of half a hundred human lives a few miles out of Washington Sunday night, the interstate commerce commission decided to have an investigation of its own.

Authority for this action on the part of the commission was found under the joint resolution of congress instructing it to make a special inquiry of the block signal system as operated by the railroads.

Block System a Farce.

The frequency of rear-end collisions or the telescoping of one train by another has aroused the members of the commission, as well as congress and the entire country, to the belief that something is radically wrong in the pretended operation of the block system, and the commission proposes now to find out the facts.

Astounding statements made by experts of the commission indicate that the people of the United States have been misled into the impression that the block systems of this country are adding greatly to the safety of travel. On the other hand, the experts say these systems have had no such effect. The commission's statistics prove that a constantly increasing proportion of accidents occurs.

RECEPTION AT WHITE HOUSE.

New Year's Function Is an Unusually Brilliant Affair.

Washington, Jan. 3. — President and Mrs. Roosevelt's New Year's reception at the White House yesterday was a brilliant function and was attended by about 8,500 persons. After the diplomats had been received, Secretary and Mrs. Root left the line in the blue room and one by one the members of the cabinet and their wives deserted the president in order to hold receptions in their own homes.

It was generally remarked that the proportion of negroes in the line was smaller than in previous years.

Many Children in Line.

There was an unusually large number of children in line and all were greeted heartily by the president. One of the most amusing figures in the line was a ten-year-old boy, with soiled hands and clothes, who carried a pair of roller skates thrown over his shoulder. The president laughed heartily as he wished the little fellow a happy New Year.

A pretty little girl carried a great white Teddy bear past the receiving party and provoked a hearty laugh from the crowd gathered in the blue room.

40 NORTH DAKOTA TOWNS BEG FUEL

ARE RUSHING FUEL SHIPMENTS

RAILROADS DOING EVERYTHING IN POWER TO PREVENT SUFFERING.

St. Paul, Jan. 5. — Notwithstanding the efforts of the railway companies to clear up the fuel situation in the Northwest by opening up snow blockaded lines and breaking up the car congestion, forty stations on the Great Northern are reported to be on the ragged edge of desperation over their present situation and impending disaster in case of an unexpected blizzard.

The railroads themselves admit that a blizzard would put several stations in very bad shape as to the fuel and food situation

Conditions are serious and the outlook so black that the interstate commission is considering the placing of a special agent in the Northwest to look after the fuel situation and to get such special relief as can be secured by the strong influence of the government.

Appeal for Relief.

An appeal was received from the Commercial club of Mohall, N. D., asking for immediate relief. The people in that section are entirely out of coal and on the verge of great suffering.

At the Great Northern offices in this city it was said that the company was keeping in close touch with the fuel situation and would do everything in its power to prevent actual suffering at any of its stations.

Reports already in hand at the general offices show that forty towns in North Dakota are in sore need of fuel. In the meantime delayed shipments of fuel are being pushed through as rapidly a spossible.

STANDARD'S DEMURRER FAIL

JUDGE LANDIS OF CHICAG RULES ON EFFECT OF NEW LEGISLATION.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—Judge Landis, in the United States district court, yesterday overruled the demurrer of the Standard Oil company to eight indictments pending against that company for alleged violations of the Elkins law, but sustained the demurrer as to two other indictments because of technical defects.

The ruling is a victory for the government in the preliminary stage of the prosecution of the corporation for receiving concessions equivalent to rebates in the remission of storage and freight charges.

The court ruled against the defendant's contention that the Elkins law was enacted really to prohibit the employment of indirect methods to obtain preferential rates, it being the defendant's contention that it was not a violation of the law if a railway company dealing directly with a shipper gave that shipper a cut rate.

Same Rates to All.

The contention of the defense was that the enactment of the new law extinguished the penalties for the offenses against the Elkins law. Judge Landis said in part:

"What congress wants to bring about is reasonable rates for all shipments, not merely for some shippers. To abolish preferences the law provides that the published rate shall be the only lawful rate.

"The defendant challenges the indictment because it does not appear that the Standard was a shipper, but only a consignee. I do not understand that the law is operative on consignors only."

News of the Northwest.

JAMES MANAHAN TURNED DOWN

HIS CHARGES THROWN OUT

GOVERNOR REFUSES TO ACT ON COMPLAINT AGAINST THE COMMISSION.

St. Paul, Dec. 30.—James Manahan, attorney for the shippers' association, has been barred from practicing before the state railroad and warehouse commission. The commission yesterday adopted a resolution excluding and barring him from practicing before it as an attorney in any future proceedings until the further order of the commission. This action is based, according to the resolution, upon the ground that Manahan "has shown not only his inability, but, on the contrary, has commission, but, on the contrary, has repeatedly interfered with the proper order and regulation of the proceedings."

Turned Down by Gov. Johnson.

Gov. Johnson made public a letter in which he refused to take any action on the charges filed against the commission some time ago by Mr. Manahan. The governor admits that possibly an injustice has been done Mr. Manahan in refusing to allow him to appear as a party to the recent commodity rate investigation, but that the action was taken on the advice of the attorney general, and as he is the legal adviser of the board the responsibility rests upon the attorney general and not upon the board.

Besides, Gov. Johnson says, the complaint does not contain specific facts showing a corrupt intent, and this also prevents him from acting.

"I have planned to retire as soon as I could safely do so. By that time I shall be able to leave the work of a lifetime, the business here, on a safe, sound base that will endure."

WANTS LAWS TO BUST TRUSTS.

Attorney General's Recommendations in His Report.

Edward T. Young, attorney general of the state, has transmitted to the governor his annual report, in which he recommends important changes in the laws covering anti-trust laws, timber matter, the inheritance tax and public service corporations, and recommends an appropriation for extra help in his office.

It is very apparent, the report states, from the number of complaints received at the attorney general's office recently, with reference to combinations and associations formed for the purpose of restraining trade and securing monopolistic control of the markets, that the legislature should turn its attention to a revision and elaboration of the present anti-trust laws, so as to give the prosecuting officers of the state better opportunity to reach existing evils and successfully prosecute this class of cases.

Under the present law, he states, the grain trade has fallen into the hands of two close corporations, one at Minneapolis and the other at Duluth. These institutions have absolute control of the grain market of the state, he says, and they assume, under the law, the power to exclude from membership any one considered undesirable, the person thus excluded being absolutely debarred from embarking in the grain trade by reason of its concentration within these organizations. While admitting that there should be central markets for great staples like grain and live stock, the attorney general believes the producers of the state are entitled to be protected against monopolies.

Alike condition, he states, exists in the live stock business where the exchange controls the business and fixes the prices and commissions. The department has a case pending in the supreme court involving the validity of the rules of the Duluth board of trade, but this will not be determined before the legislature adjourns, and "the power of the legislature to remedy this evil is far more ample than that of the courts."

The report states that if the timber board were given a little more discretion it would be able to make a number of adjustments which would obviate the necessity for the large number of suits now being brought. The most glaring defect of the timber law, he believes, is the one relating to the scaling of the state's timber sold upon permits. The present law, he states, is antiquated.

The surveyors general receive fees from the state for scaling timber cut under permits in their districts and also receive fees from the lumbermen for scaling timber cut upon private land. When the lumbermen employ the surveyors general to scale the timber cut on private land it is a matter of favor, the report states, and places them to some extent under obligations to the lumbermen, so that in order to get their private business, which adds to their income, they are under possible temptation to give a favorable scale upon state timber.

The report recommends the abolition of the system of dividing the state into districts, and urges the creation of the office of state scaler of timber, who, with his deputies, shall be salaried officials. Some such plan, the attorney general believes, would result in a large gain to the state in the scaling of its timber. He expressly disclaims any reflection upon any person in the matter, but simply criticises the system.

BIG WEEK FOR FARMERS

Various Agricultural Organizations to Hold Interesting Meetings.

The week of Jan. 7 will be an important one for the farmers of Minnesota, and it is expected that hundreds of them will be in the Twin Cities to attend the various meeting of the agricultural organizations of the state. At 10 o'clock on Monday morning, Jan. 7, the Farmers' club of Minnesota opens its annual meeting at the university farm at St. Anthony Park. This organization is made up of graduates or former students of the agricultural school, and its projects are to extend the influence and practical benefits of the school to every locality in the state. Local auxiliary clubs are formed by the members who seek to promote practical experiments in agriculture and breeding, and a thorough discussion of practical matters among the members.

Already very valuable reports are being made to the central organization and this winter's meeting is expected to be an unusually interesting one. Among the spkears will be Prof. Fred Rankin of the Illinois experiment station.

On the following day the session of the Minnesota State Agricural society will open in the assembly hall at the Minneapolis court house and continue for three days. The subject of drainage will be made prominent, and the Minnesota dairy and food commission will have charge of one session. On Wednesday afternoon and evening the sessions will be held in the live stock pavilion at the university farm under the auspices of the Live Stock Breeders' association.

FIRE MARSHAL IN BAD BOX.

Law Creating Office in Need of Some Tinkering.

The law by the last legislature creating the office of state fire marshal, with a provision for raising funds for maintenance of the office, is proving a money-making proposition for the state, but at the expense of the service rendered the state by the office. The state has collected $16,000 under this law, of which $3,000 has gone to pay the state fire marshal, Edward Peterson, his salary and traveling expenses and the balance must be turned into the general revenue fund of the state on Jan. 1.

In creating the office two years ago the legislature provided for the collection of a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the insurance premiums of fire insurance companies in Minnesota, as shown by the annual reports of the companies. The law was passed in April, 1904, and the tax collected for last year was for only a portion of the year, amounting to $16,000. The law provided for a salary of $2,500 for the fire marshal, and provided further that he maintain an open public office in the capitol, with records always open for inspection, and authorized him to employ assistants for investigating fires. But while the legislature made these provisions for the conduct of the office and the keeping of records, it omitted one quite necessary provision—that of providing for the payment of the expenses connected with carrying out those provisions.

It was this little omission that will result in enriching the state to the extent of $13,000 on Jan. 1, when the balance of this special tax is turned over to the general fund. In the meantime Mr. Peterson has endeavored to find some way of getting around the failure of the legislature to provide funds for conducting the office as provided by law, but without success.

The ontly satisfaction the attorney general could give him was that the legislature had certainly authorized him to maintain an office and records and to employ field assistants, but that if he availed himself of these privileges he would have to pay them out of his own salary. This method did not appeal to him strongly enough for Mr. Peterson to put it into execution. He has drawn his salary and about $500 for traveling expenses, but the rest of the fund has remained idle and will be merged with other moneys of the state at the end of this month.

When the legislature meets next month Mr. Peterson will ask that the law be amended so that the money raised for this purpose may be used in carrying out the provisions of the law. The amount to be raised for this department during the coming year will amount to about $25,000.

GIVES EXPERT ADVICE.

E. K. Slater Goes Before National Pure Food Commission.

E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, has returned from Washington D. C., where he appeared before the national pure food commission in a hearing on the matter of establishing the requirements with reference to the amount of butter fat and moisture in butter.

The dairy and food commissioners of a number of states appeared before the commission and gave their ideas on the subject. The hearing was held for the purpose of ascertaining the best way of harmonizing the national pure food law and the rules of the internal revenue department, the two being now in conflict. The pure food law requires that butter shall contain 82 1-2 per cent of butter fat, and the internal revenue law fixes the maximum standard of 16 per cent of moisture.

As the salt and casein, or cheese product, constitutes 4 per cent of butter, the requirements of the two laws sometimes conflict, and it was for the purpose of getting the suggestions of the various dairy and food commissioners that the hearing was held. Most of the commissioners suggested reducing the pure food law requirement so as to require but 80 per cent of butter fat and to raise the moisture standard to 16 per cent. Mr. Slater proposed a compromise between the present laws and these recommendations and suggested that the butter fat requirement be reduced to 81 per cent and the moisture requirement to 15 per cent.

The commission took the matter under consideration and will endeavor to adjust and harmonize the two laws.

How many of the housewives of Red Lake Falls realize the importance of using home-made goods?

How many husbands realize the importance of teaching their wives to use home-made goods?

There is manufactured right here in Red Lake Falls a brand of flour that is equal to any in the country. The local mill employs about 35 men and has a capacity of over 600 barrels.

If every housewife in Red Lake Falls should ask for the local-made product when buying flour it would increase the sales of the mill 10 per cent. This would mean more men employed at the mill: it would mean an increased payroll, and an increased payroll would mean more business for the merchant, the real estate man, the banks and every line of business. It would also add to the population of the city.

Flour made in Minneapolis or any other outside town and sold here does no good to our city. The money paid for it goes to help build up the city in which the flour is manufactured. The man who produces the flour has no interest in this town; he spends no money here; he does nothing for the advancement of this community, yet the local mill is expected to and does contribute to every local affair, both in money and support.

This is "food for thought" for all who want to "Watch Red Lake Falls Grow."

The first issue of the Stephen Journal, Stephen, Marshall county, by Victor C. Peterson, has the appearance of a winner and should be well patronized by the community which it aims to serve.

Railroad accidents are becoming so frequent that the daily newspapers no longer deem them of enough importance to give accounts of them on the first page.

The local Creamery association shows a very creditable and flourishing condition. This is one of our "infant industries" that should be nursed to a healthy growth.

The new county officers are now installed and business of the county is moving along smoothly.

MIX THIS AT HOME.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to readily relieve and overcome any form of Rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter from the blood and system all the uric acid and poisonous waste matter, relieving at once such symptoms as backache, weak kidneys and bladder and blood diseases.

Try it, as it doesn't cost much to make, and is said to be absolutely harmless to the stomach.

Get the following harmless ingredients from any good pharmacy: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bedtime.

This mixture is said to give prompt relief, and there are very few cases of Rheumatism and Kidney troubles it will fail to cure permanently.

These are all harmless, every-day drugs, and your druggist should keep them in the prescription department; if not, have him order them from the wholesale drug houses for you, rather than fail to use this, if you are afflicted.

The last reminder of the holidays disappeared when the local merchants removed the holly and other Christmas decorations from their display windows.

Charity at Home.

Mrs. Russell Sage took a very unostentatious way of doing good with the millions left by her late husband. The fact that she increased substantially the bequests made to natural kin by the testator was commented upon at the time as a means of staving off lawsuits. But the handsome gifts to family servants and the increase of the salaries of the clerks who had served her husband faithfully for years were certainly free from every sort of suspicion. The estate owed them nothing. They had worked under contract and received their pay. And, after all, charity is not exactly the name to apply to these windfalls given to servants and servitors of the family. They were inspired by a fellow feeling all too rare, it must be confessed, in some circles of American life and yet more common, taking society through, than is usually recognized.

Mrs. Sage gave liberally to those right around her, whose lives she knew and whose struggles to get on in the world by honorable methods she must have watched and admired. It was as though she called them together and said to each, "I want you to share in the good fortune that has come to the house." She might have made the world ring for a day with the naming of great gifts to institutions, benefiting perhaps thousands of folks of whom she never heard and who never would know more of her than that she was immensely rich and gave away what she couldn't use herself. But in recognizing virtue right around her she filled with joy and gratitude the hearts of a score of men and women who will bless her daily to the end of life. Too often the wants—and, if there are no definite wants, then the merits—of those right around us are overlooked. Because our daily companions work right on without complaining it is no sign that they are not carrying burdens that gall them to the quick. Those who are themselves struggling are the first to stop and lend a helping hand to others in the same plight. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind." But our fellow has to be up against the same stunt as ourselves or he won't know when and where the pinch comes. It is those who are out of the struggle, beyond it or never in it, who would be able to give the most substantial help if only they had the mind. Mrs. Sage has set a good example in this rushing, glory seeking age by helping those who through personal contact and observation she knows have tried to help themselves and do their duty to society.

Our "Dreadnought."

Plans for a monster battleship to be built by the United States "as an answer" to the terrible Dreadnought of the British navy have recently been examined by the board before submitting a choice to congress. Two of the plans call for a ship of greater tonnage than the British rival, and the guns are so mounted as to give the broadsides greater power than is possessed by the Dreadnought.

In the plans submitted there appears to be a desire to get extra force in one direction even at the cost of force in another. For instance, the fire ahead and astern is perceptibly weakened in order to get preponderance in the broadside fire. Probably this weakness may be remedied before the construction begins. The cost of building such a ship is of course enormous, and it is said that three Idahos or Mississippis could be put afloat for the money it costs to provide one of these monsters, which a torpedo may send to the bottom in an instant. But the idea seems to be that the United States should have a single ship able to smash anything that any nation has afloat.

Perhaps Stensland and other convicted bank wreckers who, like him, get jugged on an indeterminate sentence will stay behind the bars just as long as the culprit sentenced for ten or twenty years. Long sentences sometimes react and create sympathy for the convict. Still, there is a terror in a long sentence which gives the state power to punish a man to the limit of his deserts when policy demands it.

Officers and men of the United States army will hereafter wear identification metal tags. Doesn't sound dignified, but it is, all the same, very sensible. People who go away from home alone, especially tourists by rail and visitors to large cities, ought to have some simple form of personal identification attached to them in a way to be promptly discovered in case of accident.

Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" has been produced with live cattle on the stage. The manager of the show should be thanked for the self restraint he has exhibited in refraining from stuffing sausages in full view of the spectators.

Those Ute Indians have kindly agreed to go to Fort Meade and have their meals brought to them. This is obviously easier than having to borrow a wagon load of supplies from an unwilling cavalry troop before ringing the dinner bell.

DO YOU KNOW

That before giving advice prepare to dodge the consequences.

That kleptomaniacs will take almost anything except a joke.

That love is one of the things that don't thrive on absent treatment.

That a woman judges the value of a letter by the postage it has to pay.

That faith is what a woman thinks she believes because she believes it.

That it is better to be a peaceful bachelor than to be a fighting benedict.

That the severest strain on politeness is to step down and out gracefully.

That it makes a girl boil with indignation to have anybody see her kissed.

That if you would make your friends smile you might let your money talk.

That about the only way a man can cut down his living expenses is to go to jail.

That the man nobody can quarrel with has the problem reasonably well solved.

That some women use tears the way some men use their fists: to fight with.

That some regular preachers put people to sleep, but an evangelist wakes them up.

That it's surprising how fond of people you can be if you are far enough away from them.

That no matter how happily they have lived together, an old couple never agree on dates.

That you can nearly always tell a good mechanic: the other men in his line in the same town hate him.

That people are wondering what has become of the old fashioned girl who was ever ready to faint away.

That when a woman won't say anything nice about another it's a sign she thinks her husband does.

That the trouble with some people lies in the fact that they consider their faults their misfortunes.

That possibly it is all right to be extravagant; to live well, and spend your money freely, but don't be wasteful.

That some babies cry as though they were in pain, while others cry as though they were mad, and need a spanking.

That there is a great deal in the theory of heridity, but people are inclined to believe that a man who says he drinks because his father did isn't trying very hard to swear off. More than that, it shows very little regard for his paternal ancestor.

That there is this difference: after a woman has been married a few years, she does most of her dreaming at night.

That when a couple has been "engaged" for three or four years their romance is as cold as the love in one of Henry James' novels.

That every boy is anxious for the time to come when he can shave. When it arrives, he finds it about as troublesome as carrying coal.

That when a man chooses to be industrious, honest, temperate and reliable, and amount to something, how the drunkards and loafers hate him, and say he is a wolf and steals everything in sight.

I want to make your clothes. I have the largest tailoring establishment in the world, and my mail order department is conducted in such a manner that no matter where you live I can fit you and give as good satisfaction as if you were measured in my Minneapolis store in person. I want you to write me for samples. I want to demonstrate to you that for $15.00, $20.00 and $25.00 I can make you a better suit or overcoat than your local tailor would charge you $30.00, $35.00 and $40.00 for—the kind that no ready-made store could give you at any price.

Write me today and tell me about the kind of clothes you are thinking of getting. By return mail I'll send you samples and self-measurement blanks. Don't be afraid to ask questions. Remember I absolutely guarantee perfect fit and satisfaction or refund your money; and I pay all express charges, so your clothes cost you no more than if you got them right here in Minneapolis.

Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

THE PROGRESS OF THE CANADIAN WEST.

Nearly 200,000 of an Increase in Canada's Immigration in 1906.

The progress of a new country cannot be better ascertained than by noting the increase of railroad mileage in its transportation system, and, judged by this standard, the Canadian West leads all the countries in the world during the current year. Thirty years ago there was not one hundred miles of railroad west of the Great Lakes, and very little prospect of a transcontinental route for many years to come, but by the end of 1885 the Canadian Pacific Railway was within measurable distance of completion, and last year—twenty years later—over 6,000 miles of railroad traversed the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In the past year the work of railroad construction has been vigorously prosecuted, and by the end of 1906, some 5,000 miles of completed railroad has been added, making a total of fully 11,000 miles in the three great grain producing provinces of Canada. Such an increase in the transportation facilities of the country is bound to make good times not only in the districts where the railroads are being built, but throughout the entire west. Allowing $20,000 a mile for construction, the sum of $100,000,000 will be put in circulation, and this in itself should cause good times to prevail in a land where work is plentiful, wages are high, and the cost of living is moderate.

But the building of new railroads through Western Canada means a greater benefit to the country than merely the money put in circulation by the cost of construction. Additional railway building means the opening of new agricultural districts and an additional area under crops; a largely increased output of grain to foreign markets with consequent financial returns; the erection of elevators and the growth of villages, towns and cities; and everything else that makes for the progress of national life, and the opening up of additional thousands of free homesteads, so extensively advertised by the Canadian government agent, whose address appears elsewhere.

It was stated on the floor of the Canadian Parliament recently by a prominent representative that ten years from now would see the bulk of the population of Canada residing west of the Great Lakes, and if the work of railway building during the present year is any criterion, the prophecy made by the Canadian statesman may be easily fulfilled inside of the time stated. During the present year no less than 189,064 persons have found homes in the Canadian west, of whom 57,796 were Americans who have seen the great possibilities of this new West, and have decided to cast in their lot with it. Certainly, our neighbor north of the 49th parallel is making a great record, and deserves the success that appears to be coming its way.

A Feeling Without Words.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman-Catt, the famous woman's rights leader, said of an untactful motion at a woman's club:

"This motion, in its delicacy, reminds me of a Ripon man.

"The man got married, and after he had been married several years his wife said to him one night:

"'You do not speak as affectionately to me as you used to Hal. I fear you have ceased to love me.'

"'Ceased to love you!' growled the man. 'There you go again. Ceased to love you! Why, I love you more than life itself. Now shut up and let me read the paper.'"

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XXVI.—Continued.

Aloysius the younger, reading this second letter also for the fiftieth time, recalled the answer he addressed to the writer of it in expression of affectionate sympathy and deep regret. He recalled the waiting for the banker's draft which never came. He went on to the next document in his sheaf:

"Dear Mr. Aloysius: I regret to be the bearer of ill news. My poor, dear old master has disappeared. I had been away on three days' leave to bury my brother, and when I got back your poor uncle had not been seen for more than forty-eight hours. Mr. Alexis is quite ill and seems distracted. Master had lost his temper with Mr. Alexis and went out about 9 o'clock at night, taking his latch-key with him. Mr. Alexis, being not wishful to see him again that night, went to his own room early. The woman who had been called in for service took master's cup of tea to his room at 9 o'clock. She says she supposed that master was sleeping out on a journey or at a friend's house. She said nothing, and master was not missed till afternoon. Since then we have moved heaven and earth to find him, but there is no news and no sign. You must excuse me taking the liberty of enclosing a five-pound note, Mr. Aloysius, for I know it has not been your uncle's habit to keep keep you very flush, and you are wanted here so badly that you must not lost one hour in coming. With affectionate respects and deep sorrow,

—"Robert Sewar."

Aloysius, reading this, recalled all the old anxieties and fears of the dreary journey Londonwards, and one horrible suspicion which would intrude upon him in spite of all the reason he brought to bear against it.. He fought it down loyally and he strangled it. But it sprang to life again, in spite of the fact that everything known to him made it improbable. He feared lest Alexis should have been in some way responsible for the old man's disappearance. Alexis might be weak. He had often reproached him for want of stability, but it was madness to suppose that he had done anything deliberately. A chance blow, perhaps, given in a moment of intense irritation and despair!

It might well be that so full a life may have ended thus. And then the horror lest in fear the hapless victim of his own nervous rage should have striven to conceal the body, and so have given himself over beyond remedy into the hands of the law. But there was not one corner of the old Georgian house in which his uncle had lived which would not be ransacked by the police. If the dread were well founded, detection was certain.

And then, on the other side—on the right side, so Aloysius protected himself—Alexis was not a man of strife or violence. He had had a genuine respect for his relative and protector. And if the old man had threatened him with disinheritance Alexis would know quite clearly that it would make no difference to him, and that Aloysius was not the man to profit at his cousin's cost; even though the cousin had been guilty of an act for which he would bitterly reproach himself throughout his lifetime. That was a thing between his Maker and the sinner's conscience—not a thing for Aloysius Brangwyn to reap a profit out of.

Alexis would know all that with instinctive certainty. But the chance blow suggested itself over and over again. Aloysius seemed to see it inflicted in a dozen ways. The horror was not there, but in the thought of concealment. In that matter of the girl whom he had betrayed the unpardonable part of the whole business was that he had run away from the consequences of his wrongdoing. And here he might—he might—he might have acted on the same impulse, and so have converted accident into constructive murder. If he had played the coward and the madman there they would find the body soon or late, and would hang Alexis or send him into penal servitude for life.

All the old fears thronged into his mind. He lived that journey from Paris over again, as he sat musing with the letter in his hand. He relived the arrival at his uncle's house, the hurry and confusion which prevailed there, the search carried on by the police—so minute that not a cat could have been concealed about it—the hubbub in the press, the excitement of the public curiosity and wonder, the false scents on which the search was started, the drowned bodies, the starving vagrants—neither one nor the other bearing the remotest resemblance to the missing man—Alexis's outbursts of wild grief and self-accusation.

"The old man and I quarreled," he admitted, "and that quarrel sent him to his death. He flung out of the house in a rage, and from that hour was gone. He carried money. He wore a valuable diamond on his finger and another in his scarf-pin. His gold watch was worth fifty pounds. There has been foul play, and if I had not provoked him the thing would never have happened."

It was plausible. It was the most probable thing to think, and Aloysius, with all the forces of his mind, clung to the hope that it was true. At length he believed that he believed it; and then a something happened.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The clamor had died away. The multitudinous voices of the press had spoken their last word about the Brangwyn mistery for years to come. Alexis was his old self again. The police had been foiled on their final clue, and life, with all its various claims of mind and body, had come to its own, as it always does after any event, however momentous, until the last event of all.

The cousins were at breakfast, and old Sewar, with a napkin over his arm, stood at the sideboard.

"Loy!" said Alexis, addressing his companion with the familiar abbreviation of his name. "Come into the studio in half an hour, will you? There's something I want to ask your advice about."

"All right," said Aloysius, looking up from the study of that morning's Times. "I'll be there."

Alexis finished his coffee, lit a cigarette, and strolled away. At about the appointed time the elder found him sitting before a half-wrought colossal figure. He arose and began to circle about it critically from a dozen different halting places. Aloysius followed, engaging himself in the same way.

"What do you think of it?" asked Alexis.

"It promises," the other answered. "I don't like the pose of the head, though. You meant it for defiance?"

"Yes, that's the idea."

"Have you a sketch anywhere?"

"No," said Alexis; "I went straight at it. I like to work large, and clay's cheap enough."

"Oh!" said Aloysius, half-laughing. "You'll do nothing worth doing so long as you live until you cease to rush at your work like a bull at a gate. You have a fine talent if you choose to use it, but you're so uncertain with it. You've wasted a heap of time here, and the whole thing's set as hard as a brick. If you want to utilize the idea make a careful little sketch, and have this thing broken up, and begin again, de novo."

"Oh, dear, no," said Alexis, "I'm not going to have my Boadicea broken up. Not by any manner of means. I'll get her into a condition in which I can work at her again. I'll make Sewar spray her and cover her in wet cloths, and she'll be all right in a week."

"Very well," said Aloysius. "We'll see what you make of her. The chin wants lifting a full inch. You must bring the eyelids lower. I should cut the pupil deep — about two-thirds seen. The right hand's disproportionate. It's three or four sizes larger than the left. Bring it farther back and mass it here."

"H'm!—yes," Alexis answered, watching his cousin's hand as he drew lines in the air. "I think you're right, so far. Do you know, old man, I'm dying to get back to work again? I'm sick of this unoccupied, unsettled life. I must take up something ambitious—something that will fasten on me and distract my thoughts, or I do sincerely believe I shall go mad. I begin to understand Eugene Aram with his 'one tormenting, horrid thought, that racked him all the time.'" He began to pace up and down the room, muttering under his breath and gesticulating wildly.

"Steady!" said Aloysius, "Steady!"

"I was thinking of the poem," Alexis answered. "What a masterpiece!" he began to recite, with a vibrating voice and dreadful eyes:

"And well," quoth he. "I know for truth
Their pangs must be extreme,
Woe! Woe! Unutterable woe!
Who spill life's sacred stream.
For why? Methought last night I wrought,
A murder—in a dream."

It looked and sounded like a piece of the intensest acting, and it startled Aloysius, who never had thought his cousin had any power that way. It was not less than awful. The cry, "Woe! Woe! Unutterable woe!" was like the wail of a lost soul, and the despairing toss of the hands that went with it was as eloquent as the tone itself. Then the wail dropped to a hoarse whisper, the last word of which was barely breathed, and sounded horrible because in some inexplicable way the tone proclaimed the word a lie and the pretended vision a reality.

"Hold on!" said Aloysius, sternly. "Stop that! You make my flesh creep. Come into the fresh air. Come into the park."

"Why not?" returned Alexis. His face was pale, but he had turned back to his ordinary manner.

That scene, too, came back to Aloysius as he sat alone with those old letters. And then that ever-memorable walk, the true beginning of the martyrdom he had endured so long. Cold looks, averted eyes, unrecognizing stares from old acquaintances, people gathering in clusters to point him out to each other furtively, and turning to look after him. That some malign influence had fallen on his world was clear enough; but the cause of it?—the cause? One old friend came up to him straight and frank and held out a hand of cordial greeting.

"You notice?" Aloysius asked, waving the light cane he carried right and left. The friend nodded to signify understanding.

"Yes," he said, "I notice, and that is why I came for you, old man—a bee line. Here, take my arm, and I'll tell you. I'd as soon go your way as another. There's some blank idiot has set abroad a report that a day or two before the old man's disappearance he gave instructions to his lawyer to cut you out of his will."

"Yes?" Aloysius was very stern and quiet.

"Well, that's all there is to it," said the other. "The servant's story to the police was clear enough, one would have thought, for anybody. He didn't send the news to Paris for two clear days, and you turned up in London two days later. But you know the world, old chap. It's a jolly sight more eager for offal than it is for wholesome food."

"That's the fact," his companion answered. "That's what they fancy, and they are precisely dolts and asses." Aloysius did not answer, but he raised his head and looked around him, proud and defiant. "Don't let 'em worry you. You're safe among your friends. Let's turn into the club You'll find a crowd of 'em there, who are indignant at the stupidity and malice of the whole thing. Come along."

Aloysius surrendered without a word, and suffered his companion to lead him where he would. He had at that moment his uncle's letter in his pocket, and he could have cleared himself of this base suspicion in an instant. But why, he asked, should he stoop to clear himself of so groundless a charge? He could do so only at the cost of his cousin's reputation. Alexis had already fallen from honor, and had fallen heavily. Alexis had confessedly been in London at the time of the disappearance, had been the last man to see him alive, had himself been threatened with disinheritance. To produce the lost man's letter would be to direct against Alexis a suspicion a thousandfold more tangible and terrible than any which could be levelled at himself. No! Let the curs yelp. He could endure, until the infamous pack ceased to give tongue. He had had his own fears about Alexis, and this was not the time, when he had outlived them, to throw them broadcast to that foul-tongued, foul-hearted world.

At the club things were better than they had been. A score of old companions sprang to greet him, and all were warm and hearty—warmer and heartier than common, for he had never been popular as his cousin was, and was lacking in that art of pleasing Alexis had in such a pronounced degree. But there were some who held aloof, and there were others who hurried from the smoke room at his advent with the most transparent pretensions of have no having seen him. The patience to which he had schooled himself in the nine long years which had elapsed between the time when these things happened and the hour at which he sat in pensive review of them with all his proofs of innocence before him had been a plant of slowest growth. Then, when the poisoned sting of slander first pierced his heart, it rankled, and, calmly as he bore himself on the outside, he suffered inward agonies. He bore them in his pride and loyalty, and no man read a sign in him, or dreamed that he had any other feeling than one of contempt at most.

There was one other memory to be lived through that day. That one that stung the fiercest—the one which sent him out to roam the world a desolate-hearted man possessed with one great fear which was to abide with him so long as the dark secret stood unsolved.

(To Be Continued.)

WELL STARTED.

College Had No Endowment, but Had a Charter.

The incident below—which Daniel Coit Gilman, LL. D., late president of Johns Hopkins university, has incorporated in his recently published sheaf of remembrances, "The Launching of a University and Other Papers"—could not happen at the present time, when each new institution of learning has its millionaire sponsor.

A gentleman, President Gilman says, once introduced himself to Dr. Day, then president of Yale, as chancellor of a Western state university.

"How large a faculty have you?" President Day inquired, with genuine interest.

"Not any," answered the Western gentleman.

"Have you any library or buildings?"

"Not yet."

"Any endowment?"

"None."

"What have you, then?" persisted President Day.

The visitor's countenance brightened. "We have a very good charter," said he.

Sells Snails for Living.

On the southern slope of a range of hills twenty miles from London an old crippled keeper ekes out his slender pension by collecting and feeding snails, and finds a ready sale for them in the foreign restaurants. He also holds a standing order for all the autumn-caught bumblebees he can collect, for exportation to New Zealand. These bees fertilize the flowers of clover plants.

Didn't Mind the Men.

"And you won't tell that I permitted you to kiss me the first night we met?"

"I swear I will not."

"I mean, that you won't tell any girls."

ODD CHARACTER IN CAPITAL.

Woman of Remarkable Mentality Lives There in Poverty.

Living in squalor in the suburbs of Northeast Washington is a little old blind woman who has a remarkable history. She claims to be a lineal descendant from Russian nobility, and as having been married to a "grandee" in that country when she was a very small girl. This venerable woman, though living in the most miserable surroundings, has a brilliant mind and is an advanced student of astronomy. One of her axioms is to the effect that this life would not be worth the living were it not for the spiritual side of it.

"I do not live here," she said, dreamily the other day. "I exist away up yonder (pointing skyward) where there are suns, stars and worlds, but, above all, where there is spirituality everywhere. Where the sordid and mean things of this life are not to be found. Where there is a genial brotherhood and sisterhood of spirituality."

This remarkable woman numbers among her other accomplishments the writing of poetry. Her friends claim she can foretell coming events with almost unerring certainty. She has been a student of materia medica since girlhood. Recently a number of prominent people have visited the shanty in which she makes her earthly abode while waiting patiently for the time to come when her spirit will be transported to "the land of the sky and stars," and every one remarks upon her phenomenal mentality.

WASHINGTON AS A MODEL CITY

The Movement Has Lately Been Given Decided Impetus.

The most notable piece of cooperation has been in the movement to make the national capital a model city in its social and economic environment, as well as in broad avenue and public building.

The Washington monument has a stone from every state in the union. The civic neglect of the District of Columbia has come from the same quarries. For congress is the common council of the district and year after year had administered defeat to measures that would restrict child labor and lower an excessive infant mortality; would require compulsory education for Washington children at the hands of the same authority which builds schoolhouses for the Tagalogs, and would raze alley shacks, fairly under the eaves of the capitol, which, on the word of two western senators, were not fit for cow stables.

The fight against child labor and for compulsory education has yet to be won. But a wife-desertion bill was passed, a juvenile court bill enacted and a judge appointed, two foul blind alleys were opened at once into minor streets, the president commissioned a special representative to investigate conditions, and a bill passed providing for the condemnation of insanitary dwellings, which had hung fire for nine years. Here was more social legislation in five months than in as many years before.

Has Fondness for Capital City.

Mrs. Elihu Root, wife of the secretary of state, despises Washington life as much as her husband likes it.

Mrs. Root was instrumental in getting her husband to resign as secretary of war and return to New York. She did not know of the preliminary arrangements when the president invited Mr. Root to take John Hay's place in the cabinet, and the announcement that Mr. Root had accepted the portfolio of state came as a great surprise to her while she was visiting some relatives up state in New York.

She read a dispatch from her husband announcing his decision, and then turned to her friends and said:

"I do believe that if they offered that husband of mine a place as policeman in Washington he would take it, he likes to live there so well."

The Vice President Suffered.

Vice President Fairbanks was exchanging compliments with the mayor of Kansas City, Mo., and other prominent citizens in Washington attending the deep water ways convention. He moved nervously from one foot to the other and apparently was in a hurry to get away.

"Yes, drop in any time," he said. "I'm a little busy this morning, but come in any time; always glad to see you."

The delegation bowed itself out, and the door had scarcely closed when the vice president shouted for his messenger.

"John, scoot for home and get me my old shoes," he said. "Its wonderful how a new pair pinches."

While the messenger was going and returning the vice president sat in solitary glory in his room, receiving no visitors.

Hot Shot for Depew.

Senator Depew called on the president. He was a sort of twelfth carbon copy of the old blithesome and debonair Depew, but he did as well as he could in the circumstances.

"Senator," said the always polite president, "you certainly drink from the spring of perpetual youth."

"Ah," said Depew, raising a warning finger, "as I remember my Pope, he says nothing about the spring being perpetual, but, anyhow, we've got that spring up in Peekskill."

"If you have," said another senator in a hoarse aside, "I'll bet you've got a bunch of stock in the exploiting company that was given to you for serving as a director."

TORTURED WITH GRAVEL.

Since Using Doan's Kidney Pills Not a Single Stone Has Formed.

Capt. S. L. Crute, Adjt. Wm. Watts Camp, U. C. V., Roanoke, Va., says:

"I suffered a long, long time with my back, and felt draggy and listless and tired all the time. I lost from my usual weight, 225, to 170. Urinary passages were too frequent and I have had to get up often at night. I had headaches and dizzy spells also, but my worst suffering was from renal colic. After I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I passed a gravel stone as big as a bean. Since then I have never had an attack of gravel, and have picked up to my former health and weight. I am a well man, and give Doan's Kidney Pills credit for it."

"GOT A MATCH, MISS?"

Women Carry Matches and in Match Boxes Also.

"I have suspected it for some time," said the man of experience, "but I didn't want to say anything about it till I was cocksure. Now that I know it is true I am at liberty to speak out. Women are carrying match boxes. They carry the matches as well. During the past few months I have seen scores of women take the little fancy trinkets out of their shopping bags or purses while searching for loose change. I wondered and suffered for a long time in silence, but finally the suspense was too much for me, and I asked a woman friend who, I had discovered, was also addicted to the match-box habit, what use her sex had for the sulphurous little implements. She answered Yankee fashion.

"'Why do men carry them?' said she.

"'To light their cigars,' said I, 'and for various other purposes.'

"'It's just that way with the women,' said she. 'To light their cigarettes and for various other purposes.'

"'Which applies to your case?' said I. 'Cigarettes or miscellany?'

"'Both,' said she, and she's a mighty fine woman, too."

Nervous Woman Stopped Coffee and Quit Other Things.

No better practical proof that coffee is a drug can be required than to note how the nerves become unstrung in women who habitually drink it.

The stomach, too, rebels at being continually drugged with coffee and tea—they both contain the drug—caffeine. Ask your doctor.

An Ia. woman tells the old story thus:

"I had used coffee for six years and was troubled with headaches, nervousness and dizziness. In the morning upon rising I used to belch up a sour fluid regularly.

"Often I got so nervous and miserable I would cry without the least reason, and I noticed my eyesight was getting poor.

"After using Postum a while, I observed the headaches left me and soon the belching of sour fluid stopped (water brash from dyspepsia). I feel decidedly different now, and I am convinced that it is because I stopped coffee and began to use Postum. I can see better now, my eyes are stronger.

"A friend of mine did not like Postum but when I told her to make it like it said on the package, she liked it all right." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Always boil Postum well and it will surprise you.

ELEVEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Hands Cracked and Bleeding—Nail Came Off of Finger—Cuticura Remedies Brought Prompt Relief.

"I had eczema on my hands for about eleven years. The hands cracked open in many places and bled. One of my fingers was so bad that the nail came off. I had often heard of cures by the Cuticura Remedies, but had no confidence in them as I had tried so many remedies, and they all had failed to cure me. I had seen three doctors, but got no relief. Finally my husband said that we would try the Cuticura Remedies, so we got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment, and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent Pills. Of course I keep Cuticura Soap all the time for my hands, but the one cake of Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment cured them. It is surely a blessing for me to have my hands well, and I am very proud of having tried Cuticura Remedies, and recommend them to all suffering with eczema. Mrs. Eliza A. Wiley, R. F. D. 160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The testimony of thousands during the past year is that the Canadian West is the best West. Year by year the agricultural returns have increased in volume and in value, and still the Canadian Government offers 160 acres FREE to every bona fide settler.

Some of the Advantages

The phenomenal increase in railway mileage—main lines and branches—has put almost every portion of the country within easy reach of churches, schools, markets, cheap fuel and every modern convenience.

The NINETY MILLION BUSHEL WHEAT CROP of this year means $60,000,000 to the farmers of Western Canada, apart from the results of other grains and cattle.

HEARTH & BOUDOIR

Necessary to Retain Beauty

HEALTHY SLEEP AN ALL-IMPORTANT FACTOR.

Complete Rest Is a Requisite If One Would Have Bright Eyes, Clear Skin, and a Cheerful Mind —How to Procure It.

A woman who leads an active life, yet gets very little sleep, cannot hope to retain her beauty or health for any length of time. A complete rest for from seven to eight hours nightly must be cultivated until it becomes a fixed habit. Have a regular hour for rising and retiring and do not deviate from it unless forced to.

Hot Milk as a Night Cap.

Bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful mind, muscular tone and nervous energy are among the good conditions promoted by sleep of the right kind, while broken and insufficient sleep will tend to produce the very opposite states. If a woman would have the roseate beauty of the dairymaid it is quite necessary to obtain the same health conditions enjoyed by the dairymaid. So, if the sleep is broken or insufficient, a certain amount of muscular work should be gone through with each night before retiring. Tax endurance, says a well-known nerve specialist, but do not tax strength.

The very latest cure for sleeplessness was thought out by a celebrated French doctor, who came to the conclusion that most insomnia was due to over-fatigue or over-excitement of the nerves. To counteract this the doctor believes in a series of muscular exercises warranted to relax the tension of the nerves and bring about that delightfully drowsy sensation—the forerunner of refreshing sleep.

Annie Payson Call says there are five things to remember if you want to rest an overtired brain. "1. A healthy indifference to wakefulness. 2. Concentration of mind on simple things. 3. Relaxation of the body. 4. Gentle rhythmic breathing of fresh air. 5. Regular nourishment."

That really covers it all.

When Belinda comes home feeling "too tired to sleep" there is no use her trying to go to bed at once. Let her take a warm bath, letting the cold water run in until the water becomes cool, then let her slowly go through the many different points of the toilet, manicuring and hair brushing, for instance, so often done in a rush. These help relax and quiet the nerves and can take up an hour's time. Last of all a cup of warm milk with a pinch of salt. Many people, this applies particularly to men, suffer from sleeplessness because they are not properly nourished. Exhausted or irritated and excited nerves need nourishing. A bite of light and easily digested food will not keep one awake—on the contrary, it is often just what is needed to induce sleep.

Sleep will not come to the brain that is worrying or even to the brain that is busy with the thoughts of "How shall I make myself fall asleep?" Here is where our French doctor comes to the rescue for his muscular exercises. Take the mind off the desired outcome and center it on directing the bodily movements which the doctor advises, inducing bodily fatigue by tiring the muscles. It sounds as if it would take forever, but it doesn't. Just try it. Stretch the limbs in different directions. Lie on your back and pull the knees up. Inhale deeply while doing this. While the breath is retained stiffen and stretch the muscles, making the body as tense as possible. Now relax slowly and thoroughly, beginning with the muscles of the neck arm, and back; exhale at the some time. It is usually the neck that is so tense and rigid that very nervous people as if they were holding their heads on by main force. These stretching exercises will speedily teach one how to relax one's hold on one's own tense muscles, which is the very first thing to learn for those who suffer from insomnia.

White Jewelry to Be Popular

That Is the Prophesy Made by European Authorities.

A white year in jewelry is prophesied by European authorities on fashions. Pearls are to hold the first place, followed by moonstones, white coral and white sapphires. All the glittering stones—diamonds, rubies, emeralds—are regarded as too unrestful, too obtrusive for the cold harmonies that are to prevail in the coming winter costumes. Much attention is to be devoted to the artistic forms of jeweled ornaments. These will take the form to a large extent to flowers on stems. Blossoms of pearls, for instance, with leaves of green enamel, will be popular as hair ornaments.

In spite of the superstition regarding them, opals are to be much worn, and ball costumes will be adorned with turquoises and coral. Silver will be much used as a setting for pearls. Another style of headdress will consist of gold or silver lacework set with pearls.

In New Shapes and Designs

Some Pin Cushions Are Peculiarly Attractive—Pretty Laundry Bag.

Pin cushions of all shapes and designs always make acceptable presents, and those patterned like apples, peaches, plums, carrots and various other garden vegetables in natural colors are particularly attractive, for they are so different from the stereotyped forms of hearts, squares, ovals and even dolls clad in beruffled frocks that have been previously used.

These fruit pin cushions in rich red silk or cut carmine velvet have stems of twisted silk, a wood color, or a composition stem with copies of natural green leaves, that at a distance look real. Flower-like pin cushions, duplicates of roses, apples and peach blossoms and pond lilies, are also new and can be easily made by a woman who has any knack in cutting original patterns.

Made on the same lines as the laundry bag, with the addition of a lid that closes over the top and keeps out dust and, incidentally, any view of soiled handkerchiefs, is a small bag that, if fashioned of silk, is an adornment to a chiffonier or bureau. With two ribbon bows holding up the ends, the bag is really pretty, for over the top, finished with one oval embroidery ring, the shaped lid, covered with the material, is held in place with ribbon bows.

Pompadour ribbon continues to be used for girdles on the handsomest gowns.

Among the most fashionable plumage is that of the owl in natural colors.

Instead of an all-white gown many of the lace and chiffon dresses are made with little boleros of bright colored silk or satin.

Both high collar and cravat make the neck finish that best suits high vest openings.

Silk and wool waistings come in very pretty designs. There is one in tiny corded stripes showing white and a color just a trifle wider than pin stripes, and over all this are sprinkled pompadour flowers.

Another waisting of silk and wool has clusters of black stripes (very narrow) on a white ground, with a tiny green vine and pink buds running in between each cluster of the black.

While the length of short sleeves falls about midway the lower arm, long gloves are still necessary to wear with them.

Among the darker waistings are shown some very pretty invisible plaids in green or navy blue. These look well worn with a plain skirt of the same color as the prevailing hue in the waist.

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINT

THE PAINT WITH THE LONGEST LIFE

There is no question about it.

Masury's House Paints have been submitted to every possible test during the past sixty-five years. They have withstood the attacks of extreme heat, extreme cold, moisture and time. When properly applied on the proper surface they invariably give good accounts of themselves. Painters praise them because of their endurance and preservative qualities. Consumers endorse them because, by their use, they are spared the expense of repainting for the longest possible period. The wonderful success of the house of John W. Masury & Son for more than half a century is due to the care with which they select the ingredients used in the manufacture of their paints. Many substances could be used to lessen cost, but they are unhesitatingly rejected.

PURE LINSEED OIL

is used on account of its superior preservative qualities. The pigments ground with it are selected because experience has proved them to be best. In deciding upon paints for original painting or repainting you must remember it costs just as much to spread poor paints as it does to spread the best paints, and that in the interests of economy you should choose Masury's House Paints for the reason that they live the longest and retain their brilliancy of finish long after inferior paints have completely vanished. They are manufactured only by

RHEUMATISM
CAN NOT BE RUBBED AWAY

It is perfectly natural to rub the spot that hurts, and when the muscles, nerves, joints and bones are throbbing and twitching with the pains of Rheumatism the sufferer is apt to turn to the liniment bottle, or some other external application, in an effort to get relief from the disease, by producing counter-irritation on the flesh. Such treatment will quiet the pain temporarily, but can have no direct curative effect on the real disease because it does not reach the blood, where the cause is located. Rheumatism is more than skin deep—it is rooted and grounded in the blood and can only be reached by constitutional treatment—IT CANNOT BE RUBBED AWAY. Rheumatism is due to an excess of uric acid in the blood, brought about by the accumulation in the system of refuse matter which the natural avenues of bodily waste, the Bowels and Kidneys, have failed to carry off. This refuse matter, coming in contact with the different acids of the body, forms uric acid which is absorbed into the blood and distributed to all parts of the body, and Rheumatism gets possession of the system. The aches and pains are only symptoms, and though they may be scattered or relieved for a time by surface treatment, they will reappear at the first exposure to cold or dampness, or after an attack of indigestion or other irregularity. Rheumatism can never be permanently cured while the circulation remains saturated with irritating, pain-producing uric acid poison. The disease will shift from muscle to muscle or joint to joint, settling on the nerves, causing inflammation and swelling and such terrible pains that the nervous system is often shattered, the health undermined, and perhaps the patient becomes deformed and crippled for life. S. S. S. thoroughly cleanses the blood and renovates the circulation by neutralizing the acids and expelling all foreign matter from the system. It warms and invigorates the blood so that instead of a weak, sour stream, constantly depositing acrid and corrosive matter in the muscles, nerves, joints and bones, the body is fed and nourished by rich, health-sustaining blood which completely and permanently cures Rheumatism. S. S. S. is composed of both purifying and tonic properties—just what is needed in every case of Rheumatism. It contains no potash, alkali or other mineral ingredient, but is made entirely of purifying, healing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks. If you are suffering from Rheumatism do not waste valuable time trying to rub a blood disease away, but begin the use of S. S. S. and write us about your case and our physicians will give you any information or advice desired free of charge and will send our special treatise on Rheumatism.

NEW EXPERIMENTS IN TURPENTINING

Chipping Only Maturer Trees and Reducing Size and Number of Wounds Increases Yield.

Ever since the Forest Service introduced the cup and gutter system of turpentining, which lessens the injury done to trees in the process of bleeding, experiments have been carried on toward still further reducing the wound inflicted in harvesting turpentine crops. The common practice of chipping the trees is still to cut the trunks so deeply to form the "face," from which the resin exudes, and to cut so many faces on each tree, that the life of trees is shortened unnecessarily and waste results. After a study of this practice it was found by experiment that the resin ducts within a quarter of an inch from the surface of the wood are larger, more numerous, and more free-flowing than those lying deeper. Two questions then suggested themselves: First, whether shallower chipping might not secure at least an equal crop, and at the same time prolong the productive life of the trees; and, second, whether more profit would not be found in cropping only the maturer trees.

To answer these questions experiments have been begun near Jacksonville, Fla., on 40,000 trees, or five crops of 8,000 trees each, including all sizes from 6 inches upward. One crop was worked in the ordinary way, both as to height and depth of the faces cut upon each tree. This served as a standard by which to measure results obtained from the novel methods tried in the four others. With the first experimental crop the chipping was reduced to one-half the ordinary depth; in the second, to half the ordinary height; and in the third, to half both the ordinary height and depth; In the fourth experimental crop, limited to trees 10 inches and over in diameter, the chippings were of ordinary size, as in the standard crop, but all trees between 10 and 16 inches in diameter had not more than two faces, whereas the usual practice is to chip more faces on the trees of these sizes. In addition, an innovation was made in this crop by chipping somewhat narrower faces on smaller trees and somewhat wider ones on the larger, so as to preserve a more constant ratio than commonly between the width of the faces and the girth of the trees.

It is too soon to attempt a statement in exact figures of the results already secured, and final determination must wait until the experiments shall have run for the regular commercial period of three or four years. The yield for this year points, however, to the following conclusions:

Reducing the size of the face by one-half in height or depth will give an equal first-year yield and a larger total yield for the working period.

Reducing the size of the face one-half in both height and depth will materially increase the annual yield owing to the lessened injury to the vitality of the tree.

Crops of the larger-sized trees with fewer and smaller faces will produce a considerably larger annual yield than ordinary crops, in which large and small trees are chipped severely and the larger trees have more faces.

Thus the conservative method will insure the best annual yield and the best total yield for the working period. The most important gain, however, is likely to be found in the longer period during which the trees can be cropped. It is believed that by cropping the larger trees only and reducing the size, and number of faces the cropping can continue for eight or ten years, by which time the smaller trees will be ready to take their place. Thus the same area will supply the operator indefinitely, and the turpentine industry will be will be greatly prolonged without destroying the southern pine forests.

To stop a Cold with "Preventics" is safer than to let it run and cure it afterwards. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will head off all colds and grippe, and perhaps save you from Pneumonia or Bronchitis. Preventics are little toothsome candy cold cure tablets selling in 5-cent and 25-cent boxes. If you are chilly if you begin to sneeze, try Preventics. Sold by all dealers.

Nations Rearming.

The haste with which the progressive nations are rearming their batteries with quick firing guns is proof of the importance of the new ordnance and the futility of peace prophecies. There is unfortunately no sign of diminishing armaments in the light of the lead given by the British army. On the contrary, each nation is expending every penny which can be extracted from the treasury in modernizing the artillery arm, and the personnel is apparently of little importance. The rearmament of the field artillery of various foreign armies with quick firing guns still continues.

Germany has issued a quick firing equipment and is experimenting with another pattern of Bavarian manufacture, while a long range field gun of 3.93 inch caliber has been introduced into the heavy artillery. Holland has reconstituted her artillery, the Dutch military authorities being keen on the employment of quick firing guns. Italy is in treaty for a supply of modern ordnance. Japan since the battle of the Shaho has introduced light shields to all field guns, and the Osaka arsenal is turning out a large number of quick firers, more than 30,000 men being constantly employed in the manufacture. Portugal has been supplied with thirty-six batteries of Schneider-Canet 2.95 inch quick firing guns. Roumania will receive 320 quick firers from Krupp during next year. Russia has armed half her batteries with a three inch quick firing gun, and Spain is acquiring fifty batteries similar to Portugal. Sweden has now completed her armament of quick firing Krupp field guns, Switzerland has rearmed her four army corps with new material, while the United States has decided on the organization of sixty four-gun batteries with the new Ehrhardt pattern gun, which has a sighting up to 6,600 yards. Austria, Denmark, Belgium and Bulgaria are also reorganizing their artillery, with particular attention to quick firing armament. Perhaps peace will come when each country is prepared right up to date and no country willing to risk the first blow.

Banking In the Interior.

The views expressed at the recent gathering of bankers in St. Louis that the currency should be reformed in the interest of the country at large have been criticised as an effort to make the government an instrument of paternalism. The claim of the financiers of the south, which is also that of the west, is that credit currency should be as promptly available for carrying on the business of one part of the country, remote though it may be from the resources of the subtreasury, as for the Wall street operators doing business in its very shadow. Advocates of this reform hold that a credit currency based upon securities other than government bonds would result in relieving the stringency of the money market in times of emergency and the south and west be enabled to move their crops without paying tribute to New York for the privilege. On this point the Atlanta Constitution says:

> So long as the bankers of New York city can absolutely dominate the money market, so long as they can exercise practical control over the reserve supply of the nation's money, so long as they are able to call in their "demand" loans when it is profitable for them to aggravate a condition of money stringency, just so long will they be able to fix the price of commodities produced and sold in this country and reap unfair profits from the toilers in times of financial need and money stringency.

Naturally the banks of New York city oppose any change of the currency system which will compel them to surrender their strategic position and relinquish their dominant power. The custom that will allow the New York city bankers to risk their resources in financing ventures of a speculative nature, while withholding the medium needed for the emergent transaction of legitimate business in other sections of the country, is unjust and discriminative. It is the province of banks to issue money upon proper security as it is needed in commerce and trade, and the currency system that does not permit the carrying out of this business on a just and uniform basis is, to that extent at least, defective.

A few months ago the guillotine was abandoned in France because parliament refused an appropriation to support it. Recently the French cabinet approved the measure to abolish capital punishment altogether, and as the advance political elements of the country oppose the death penalty for any cause whatsoever it is likely that the guillotine is happily a thing of the dreary past in France.

In proportion to the population there are more centenarians in the Balkans, where revolutions and bloodshed come every spring with the crocuses, than in any other spot on the face of the earth. The inference is that if there were no annual killings everybody there would reach the hundred mark.

If Japan makes her bluff good in San Francisco it might be well for our diplomats to take the hint and provide in future treaties for the kind treatment of American women who marry European titles.

COMMERCIAL CLUB HOLDS A MEETING

Regular Monthly Meeting of the Club. Election of Secretary and Delegate to Convention.

The regular monthly meeting of the commercial club was held Monday evening and was well attended, the feature of the evening being the election of a secretary to succeed W. S. Cox. There were two candidates for the office, P. B. Gaas and D. Doran. 43 votes were cast, Mr. Doran receiving 30 and Mr. Gaas 13. The newly elected secretary is a very popular fellow and will no doubt give satisfaction in his new calling.

The club decided by vote to become a member of tha Red River Valley Immigration and Development association, and Mr. P. B. Gaas was elected delegate to represent the club at their meeting in Fargo, Jan. 16. The committee in charge of the subscription for the payment of expenses connected with the membership in the association made a very favorable report, and the committee was continued.

The committee who have charge of the arrangements for carrying on the fire tournament reported that they were making good progress.

After the reading of a few unimportant communications and discussions on some the meeting adjourned.

BULLETIN NO. 23.

Minnesota Dairy and Pure Food Commission.

St. Paul Minn., Jan. 5th, 1906.

Numerous complaints have come to this office regarding the quality of honey on the market. Many people entertain the idea that when a sample of honey "sugars" evidence is at hand that the honey is adulterated. This is more an evidence of absolute purity than otherwise. Sensational articles have also appeared from time to time in the public press giving details of the process of manufacturing artificial comb honey. This story, warmed over at intervals serves as an effective weapon with which the sensational writer may further excite the prejudices of the pure food crank. It is a myth, pure and simple. Every sample of honey submitted to our labratory during the past year has been pronounced absolutely pure. It follows, therefore, that the quality of the honey now on the market, both strained and in the comb, is above suspicion.

Just at this season of the year when the consumption of maple syrup is greatest, I wish to again caution consumers to inspect the labels on the syrup packages. Just because the package bears the picture of a maple syrup camp scene and a wreath of maple leaves is by no means evidence that the syrup is maple syrup. If the term "maple syrup" only appears on the package it is the genuine article. By studying the labels on the majority of packages it will be observed, however, that this term alone is not used. It will be noted that there is a statement to the effect that cane syrup or corn syrup enters into the composition of the article. The blended syrup is perfectly wholesome, but is cheaper than the genuine maple syrup. The purchaser can also be guided to some extent by the price of the article. The pure article can not be sold at retail for twenty-five or thirty cents per quart.

Attention is called to the analyses quoted below. These goods were manufactured by the firm of Gordon & Dilworth, New York. In former bulletins issued by this department several samples of goods shipped by this firm into Minnesota were condemned as containing artificial coloring matter. After a careful investigation the manufacturers discovered that the coloring matter found its way into their product through some goods purchased from another manufacturer. The firm has always enjoyed an enviable reputation and I am pleased to call attention to the goods just examined. It is but justice for me to state, in view of the condemnation of their goods heretofore, that the illegality of their goods was due, in my opinion, to an accident rather than an intentional evasion of our laws on their part.

The analyses show the following goods, manufactured by Gordon & Dilworth, to be legal: Sweet spiced cherries, preserved blackberries, preserved strawberries and preserved raspberries

Numerous requests have been received for copies of complete analysis from our laboratory. The copy for the next biennial report is now in the hands of the state printer and the report will be ready for distribution in a few weeks. Parties requesting this report will be supplied free of cost as soon as the report is published.

BLOODED STOCK FARM COMES TO RED LAKE FALLS

Prominent LeSeur Man Will Raise Thoroughbred Stock on the Poirier Farm.

A new industry will soon be under way in Red Lake Falls.

Thomas Whalen, of LeSueur, who was in the city during last week bought the Napoleon Poirier farm, which is the n.e. quarter of Section 2, Township 151, range 44. The price paid for the farm was $4,500 cash, and included everything on the farm except the personal goods of the former owner.

Mr. Whalen will go extensively into the business. Nothing but thoroughbreds will be raised on the farm, and, judging from the experience Mr. Whaled has had in this line, some of the finest blooded stock in the northwest will be raised here. Horses will be the specialty of the new farm, but other blooded stock will be raised as well.

Mr. Whalen is well known throughout the country and especially in Minnesota, as he has been judge at the Minnesota State fair for many years. He was also one of the judges at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893.

Mr. Whalen has extensive interests in LeSueur and will not move to Red Lake Falls for some time, but his son, whose experience in this line is almost as wide as that of his father, will take charge of the farm at once and immediathly after his arrival. Some of the finest stock on the Whalen farm will be shipped here for breeding purposes.

Men of the stamp of Thomas Whalen and his son are the timber that our northern country needs, and when the farm is fully under way, will undoubtedly demonstrate that this is the place in which to raise such stock as Mr. Whalen intends bringing here. LeSueur will lose in Mr. Whalen one of its foremost as well as most influential citizens and Red Lake Falls and Red Lake county are indeed fortunate in securing him and his new venture.

High School Notes

[Edited by Miss Ina Linnihan.]

Isn't it cold?

Miss Twinam has been absent for the past two days on account of sickness.

The Latin classes recited to Miss Hanson Tuesday. This seemed natural to some of us.

In the German class the other day one of the boys was asked to write on the board in German "The bright stars shine brightly." The boy stood for some time without receiving an inspiration. Finnally he wrote the adjective with his mood but he hesitated some time before he would make it strong. He must have thought it strong enough.

Is chivalry dead? Miss Hanson fails to find a trace of it in some of the high school boys these cold mornings.

A small class is a great convenience sometimes; one radiator served for all the seniors Tuesday morning.

We have again resumed our spelling, another trouble.

The seniors are going through the trying ordeal of selecting a class play.

Quite a large number of pupils are absent in the grades on account of sickness.

If anyone is in difficulty in spelling, ask Walter for help.

The Spartans will give their program next Friday. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Cicero class has finished the fourth oration.

Someone please inform Olaf what a heretic is.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS

Washington, Jan. 3. 1907.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office:

Sir: Referring to the circular of instructions to special agents of your office, approved by me on Jan. 29, 1904, relative to the duties under the act of Feb. 25, 1825, (23 Stat., 321) entitled "An act to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands," you are advised that said circular is hereby amended and modified as follows:

Strike out from said circular paragraphs 5 and 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"It shall be the duty of the special agent on receipt of any charge or complaint or upon information being acquired by him from any source, that an unlawful inclosure is being maintained by any person or persons, association or corporation, to at once proceed to secure sufficient data, including a description of the lands inclosed, with reasonable certainty, not necessarily by metes and bounds, nor by Governental subdivisions of surveyed land, but only so that the inclosure may be identified and the person or persons guilty of the violation, as nearly as may be, and by description if the name can not, on reasonable inquiry, be ascertained, and to at once submit such case, with the data thus obtained, to the United States attorney for prosecution.

It shall be the duty of the special agent, and he shall be so instructed, to be alert and vigilant to detect the existence of unlawful inclosures in his district and to proceed in accordance therewith as hereinabove directed, and that he is not to construe his duties as requiring that, before proceeding in the matter of an unlawful inclosure, there must first be filed with him a formal complaint by some person or persons acquainted with the facts, but it shall be his duty, as hereinabove stated, to take the initiative himself."

In this connection you are further instructed, by direction of the President, to at once notify all of the special agents and receivers and registers of local land offices throughout the United States, and to give the widest publicity thereto that the provisions of said act of Feb. 25, 1885, for the summary destruction of inclosures and obstructions existing in violation of said act will be rigidly enforced on and after April 1, 1907.

Respectfully,
E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary of the Interior.

HOME MADE CATARRH CURE.

Any one can mix right at home the best remedy of its kind known. The name "Cyclone" is given to the following prescription, it is supposed, because of its promptness in driving from the blood and system every vestage of catarrhal poison, relieving this foul and dread disease, no matter where located. To prepare the mixture: Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon and three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bed-time.

This is a harmless, inexpensive mixture, which has a peculiar action upon the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, assisting them to filter and strain from the blood and system all catarrh poisons which, if not eradicated, are absorbed by the mucous membrane, and an open sore or catarrh is the result.

Prepare some and try it, as it is the prescription of an eminent catarrh specialist of national reputation.

RUMOR IS WRONG.

There has been a rumor that the G. A. Kankel and the Hunt Hardware Co., have not dissolved partnership. Both firms wish it to be understood that they have no connection whatever with each other, and that both are doing business separately and independent of each other.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

PLOT TO KILL ALL OFFICERS AT POST

REVEALED AS RESULT OF HEARING OF NEGRO WHO ATTACKED MACKLIN.

OFFICERS GO HEAVILY ARMED

INVESTIGATIONS GOING ON AT SEVERAL POSTS—ARRESTS EXPECTED.

El Reno, Okla., Jan. 10.—Army officers at Fort Reno are firmly convinced of the existence of a conspiracy to murder every white officer at the fort, beginning with Capt. Macklin, against whom nearly every negro soldier at the fort entertains a personal dislike, as a result of the affray at Brownsville and the discharge of the negro soldiers that followed, and then continuing down the list of officers. This became known yesterday as the result of a preliminary hearing in the case of Edward L. Knowles, corporal of Company A, Twenty-fifth infantry, who was held on a charge of assault with intent to kill Capt. Macklin of Company C, Twenty-fifth infantry, on the night of Dec. 21. Knowles was bound over to await the action of the Canadian county grand jury at the opening term of the court.

Officers Go Armed.

All the officers now go heavily armed and protected throughout the night. Every effort has been made by the officers at the post to keep the alleged conspiracy a secret, but it is learned that an investigation is now being conducted at several army posts and important places throughout the country, and within a short time several arrests of the members of the troop recently discharged in disgrace are expected to follow.

CAR SHORTAGE MUCH WORSE.

President Hill May Be Summoned by Commission to Explain.

Washington, Jan. 10.—As a result of the interstate commerce commission's investigation of the renewed complaint of coal shortage in the Northwest Mr. Hill may be summoned before the commission. Dispatches were received from municipal and state officials and from business men of the Northwest which declare that there has not been adequate relief.

In response to a telegram sent Mr. Hill word was received from him during the day that the shipments were being made as rapidly as possible and that there were nearly 500 cars of coal on the way to relieve the suffering.

Immediately following the receipt of the telegram from Mr. Hill a message came from John H. Marble, special agent of the interstate commerce commission, now in Washington, that aggressive complaints were being received at the office there from points throughout the districts demanding relief. Mr. Marble declared schools were closed in many places on account of a shortage of coal; that farmers were burning corn and hay and in several places that telegraph poles were being chopped down and used for fuel.

P. Ripley of the Santa Fe road before the interstate commerce committee in this city.

President Ripley testified that his first information of Mr. Harriman's activity in the Santa Fe securities was secured from the newspapers. He declared that the books of the Santa Fe would not show the ownership, because it was the practice of Harriman and his coterie not to have it on the books that they own the stock.

SHAH OF PERSIA PASSES AWAY

HEIR APPARENT AND MINISTERS AT HIS SIDE WHEN DEATH COMES.

London, Jan. 10. — The Daily Mail's correspondent at Teheran, in a telegram sent last night at 11:50 o'clock says:

"The shah of Persia died this evening, though no public announcement of the fact will be made until to-morrow (Wednesday).

"It was evident Monday that the end was rapidly approaching, and four injections of camphor were employed to prolong the ruler's life. Flames Cause $750,000 Damage at Detroit—Several Injured.

Detroit, Jan. 10.—Fire gutted a major portion of the large plant of the Michigan Stove works, on Jefferson avenue, last evening, causing a loss estimated at $750,000. Several firemen were injured by falling debris and half a dozen spectators were hurt when the horses attached to one of the fire department wagons ran away into the enormous crowd that lined the street opposite the burning plant. The plant employed a total of 1,100 men.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

Many Important Recommendations Submitted for the Consideration of the Legislature.

The following abstract contains all the most important points touched upon by Gov. Johnson in his message to the legislature:

The governor finds much cause for congratulation in the general condition of our prosperity. He says:

State's Finances.

"We have particular reason for felicitation in the financial condition of the state. According to the report of the state auditor there has been much improvement during the past biennial period. Economy by the legislature, followed by economical administration on the part of the executive departments, will bring a further improved condition in the near future.

"Prudence and wisdom should mark your every action, and local demands should, as far as possible, be subordinated to the good of the whole state. The state auditor in his report to you has given his estimates of the receipts and expenditures for the ensuing three years. His estimate of the total receipts for the year 1907 is $[illegible], with estimated expenditures for the same period of $[illegible]. For 1908 the income is estimated at $[illegible], with estimated expenditures of $[illegible]. For 1909 the estimated receipts of the revenue fund are $[illegible], with estimated expenditures of $[illegible]. In his estimate for the years 1908-1909, it will be necessary to raise about $[illegible] a year by direct taxation, and to produce that sum a levy of approximately a one-half mill will be sufficient; and that, [illegible], and taking into consideration the various [illegible] appropriations which are now in force, some $[illegible] will be available during these two years for new buildings and other extraordinary appropriations. While this is not a very large sum, it is hoped that the legislature will be able to practice that rigid economy which will bring the appropriations within the estimate made by the state auditor."

Taxation.

"One of the greatest questions with which you will be called upon to deal is that of solving the problem of providing, at least in some measure, a wise and just method of establishing the tax burdens of the people you represent.

"From the birth of our state government we have had an unchanged system of taxation in the form of a direct tax upon real and personal property. The history of taxation in the form of a direct tax upon real and personal property. The history of taxation in our state has taught us that taxes have not been equal and that the method has not been efficient. The cause has been in part the law and in part of [illegible].

"The state constitution provided that laws should be passed taxing all property according to its true value in money. Laws have been enacted with this idea in view, and yet we know that the taxation of all forms of property, while based in some measure upon valuation, has seldom or never approximated full value. Real property has been generally assessed at anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent of actual value; and tangible personal property at much the same ratio; while millions of dollars of invisible and intangible property has escaped taxation entirely because of the ability of the owner to evade his lawful tax burden.

"It is not to be presumed that this or any other legislative body will be able to devise a system of taxation or enact a tax law, which is going to bring about in complete form the results commonly hoped for by all people compelled to pay taxes. The best that this body can do is to equalize as nearly as may be the burden of taxation and so adjust it that its weight will not fall too heavily upon those unable to bear it, and distribute the responsibilities in accordance with the privileges enjoyed under our government. During the year 1905, the total taxes levied in our state for all purposes amounted to $22,357,320.25, distributed in various ways for the carrying on of state, county, city, town and school governments. No law can be enacted by you which will in a very large measure reduce this burden of taxation, which was even greater in 1906 than in 1905; the total taxable valuation of the property of the state for 1906 being $[illegible], in round numbers, as against $[illegible] in 1905.

The New Constitutional Tax Amendment.

"Up to this time the legislature has never been able to modify in any material degree the system of taxation which, as we all know, is very largely one of direct ad valorem taxation upon personal and real property. There has been much complaint, and that, too, very justly, by the people. This limitation has been due to constitutional restrictions, and for years there has been a clamor and much attempt to modify our constitution, removing the restrictions which have hedged about legislative bodies, and giving to them a wider and more general latitude in regulating, or in legislating upon this question of taxation.

"At the recent general election the people of Minnesota voted to modify the constitution, and adopted an amendment giving to the legislature this wider latitude; and it now falls to you to justify, in some small measure at least, the opinion of the people that this action, both by the legislature and by themselves, was a wise one.

"This amendment places in the hands of the state legislature of Minnesota, for the first time in its history, the complete and sole power and responsibility of taxation, with no constitutional restriction as regards the method of system of taxation provided, save that the taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes.

"I appreciate that there can be no great and sudden change from an unnatural and unjust taxation to a natural and just condition. The burden of taxation will continue to fall largely upon the tangible and visible property of the state. It occurs to me that, while there is much temptation to indulge in many changes from our present condition, it would be wise to make haste slowly, and that it would be far better to take one short step in the right direction than to proceed any distance in the wrong direction, and later on be compelled to retrace our steps.

Taxation of Mortgages.

"Inasmuch as all classes of property should bear a just proportion of the taxes for raising the public revenue, efforts should be made by you to increase the taxable property valuations upon those classes of property which hitherto have escaped payment of taxes either entirely or in large measure. One of the difficulties heretofore experienced has been the failure of the provision for the taxation of mortgages and other credits. It has been patent for many years that mortgages have not generally been listed for taxes, despite the fact that stringent legislation has been directed giving to the tax-collecting authority almost arbitrary and despotic power. The chief result has been fruitless effort and easy evasion of the law. Money has been loaned under fictitious names and power of attorney given exclusively for the purpose of tax evasion.

"It occurs to me that under the latitude afforded by the new constitutional amendment it will be possible for you to devise a registry and income tax on the credit, which will not be a hardship to either the loaner or the borrower of money, and yet will bring into the revenues of the state and counties a much larger sum of money than is realized under our present system.

Permanent Tax Commission.

"I would most urgently recommend legislation providing for the establishment of a permanent tax commission, which shall be empowered to make a careful and scientific study of this question. Specially important service can be rendered by the proposed state commission in seeing that the tax laws made by this legislature are enforced strictly, uniformly and impartially, and that assessments are free from discrimination as between counties, local assessment districts and different parcels of property in the same district."

Taxation of Iron Mines.

"On the iron ranges in the northeastern portion of our state, we have developed great mining enterprises which probably do not now bear their just proportion of the taxes of the state. Human mind can scarcely calculate the value of these properties, and it is not fair to assume that even at this time these properties have been listed at anywhere near a fair valuation.

Beginning with 1896, the mines have been assessed as other real property for direct taxation; the totals for St. Louis county, as equalized by the state board of equalization, being for the past ten years, approximately as follows: $3,900,000 in 1896, $8,000,000 in 1898, $16,880,000 in 1900, $30,000,000 in 1902, $42,000,000 in 1904, and $75,000,000 in 1906.

"How inadequate even the assessment of 1906 may be is apparent from the estimates of the companies themselves who hold the mining properties as assets for capitalization. In 1902, when the United States Steel corporation had much smaller iron ore holdings than at present, the officers testified in a chancery suit that the corporation had in reserve in deposits of tested ore upwards of 700,000,000 tons upon which the officials placed a value of $1 per ton. Subsequent reports of the corporation confirm this valuation and show, moreover, that the great bulk of this iron ore asset of the United States Steel corporation is located in Minnesota. Since 1902 the exploration and acquisition of iron ore properties in Minnesota have proceeded on a large scale, and the present estimates of mining, financial and government authorities as regards the explored merchantable ore deposits in Minnesota are upwards of [illegible] tons. It is, therefore, apparent that even the $75,000,000 valuation placed upon the iron mines of Minnesota by the state board of equalization in 1906 represents only a fraction of something like 5 to 10 per cent of the actual value placed upon the properties by the companies themselves for practical commercial purposes."

"The problem which confronts the state in the taxation of its vast iron ore properties is the practical impossibility of applying to these mines a valuation and tax rate which would cause them to pay a just proportion of taxes on a basis of equality with other property throughout the state.

State Versus Private Revenue From Iron Lands.

"The State of Minnesota has received one of the greatest heritages of mineral wealth ever bequeathed by mother nature to a commonwealth. The iron ore thus far surveyed and tested measures approximately one-half of the reserve deposits of the continent. The 1906 shipments of 25,483,000 tons from the Minnesota mines is over one-half of the American total and one-fourth of the world total. But the state itself is receiving a very meager share of the net revenue and general benefits.

"The great iron ore beds are being yearly depleted for the benefit of a few, and these chiefly non-resident corporations.

"There have been taken from the mines of Minnesota and shipped out of the state from the opening of the first mine, in 1884 down to the last shipment for the season just ended on Dec. 15, a total of 148,131,306 tons of iron ore, which, valued at the low average of $1.70 per ton, was worth to the shippers $251,823,220. The total revenue derived by the state during this period of twenty-two years has been $375,280 from mineral leases and contracts, $635,301 from royalties on iron ore, and less than $4,500,000 all told from taxes, including both state and local revenue, or a total of about $5,500,000, which amounts to the trifle of a little over 2 per cent as the aggregate share of the state from all sources and for all purposes from its great iron ore production and resources.

"The aggregate gross earnings of the three iron range ore carriers in hauling the total of 148,131,000 tons of iron ore from the mines to the lake, at 80 cents per ton, is $118,000,000, of which approximately $80,000,000 as shown by the official reports, represent net earnings.

"The royalty profits from iron ore tonnage to the United States Steel corporation, which holds the fee simple to the majority of the properties which it operates, and on the remainder pays royalties on contracts made at one-half to one-fourth the present royalty values, are beyond computation.

"From a portion of these iron properties, which are operated under lease, private feeholders during the past year have realized royalties exceeding $6,500,000 on the single year's output.

"During the seven years, 1900-1906 inclusive, the two iron range roads have declared dividends aggregating $21,000,000 on a total $7,112,000 of capital stock, and had on hand on June 30, 1906, after the payment of $6,453,000 of dividends during the past fiscal year, an accumulated surplus of $9,122,000.

"Thus, the State of Minnesota, which holds the resources and has yielded these magnificent incomes to a few private and corporate interests is the one party that receives only a beggarly income."

Iron Ore Royalty Tax.

"Under the new constitutional amendment it is within your power, as it is your duty, to provide some system of taxation which will give the state at least an approximately fair share of its just revenue income from this great iron ore wealth. One step in the right direction, it occurs to me, would be an income tax on the royalties or mineral rights, which are not now listed for taxation.

"This tax on mine royalties, however, would not reach the large fee holders, like the United States Steel corporation, who operate their own fee properties. The royalty value enjoyed from the use of such properties operated by the holding company is as great as from the leased properties, and the tax should reach, if possible, such royalty values as well as the royalties based on lease.

"The problem in such case would be to revise a method of arriving at or discovering a fair and just measure of such royalty values. Inasmuch as the tonnage of ore shipped is the basis for computing the royalties on leased properties, it is possible that you may be able to devise a practicable and lawful method of computing royalty taxes, using tonnage as the basis of computation. At the same time, great legal ability and care will be required to avoid the danger of double taxation, which is repugnant to the constitution and to the spirit of American institutions.

"Another feature of this problem occurs to me to be worthy of your most careful consideration. At the present time the state finances are in a healthy condition. Railroad and franchise taxes provide for a large portion of the state revenue. I believe that at this session of the legislature changes can be made in our tax laws which will substantially provide for the expenses of state government by this form of taxation; and when this can be done, taxation would be entirely left, as it ought to be, to the local governments for their self control.

"As much of the inequality arising from the application of the tax laws is due to inefficient machinery for assessment, you may find the following change worth your consideration, namely, the abolition of the office of assessor in cities, villages and towns, and in their place establish either a tax commissioner for the county, or in the larger counties, a tax commission of three or five persons, to be employed annually, with a view of the proper listing of property and the better equalization of existing values.

The governor calls attention to the necessity of changing the present law with regard to the taxation of sleeping car companies. Under the present law they are required to pay a tax of 3 per cent on the gross receipts of all business between points within the state. The governor declares that it is a well-known fact that the companies evade the spirit of this law. The remedy the governor suggests is that all sleeping car companies be compelled to report all of their business, local and interstate, and be compelled to pay in proportion on the same basis applied to railroad companies, and the tax be raised to 4 per cent.

Attention is also called to the necessity of amending the tax laws so far as they relate to telephone companies. These companies are now taxed on their gross earnings from business within this state, but no penalty is imposed for failure to pay. The governor suggests that a penalty be provided, and also that the companies be required to pay a pro rata tax on all interstate business.

Amendments to the law for the taxation of express companies along similar lines are also recommended.

The governor urges the advisability of requiring the railroads to pay their taxes semi-annually instead of annually as at present. He points out that great advantage in administering the state's finances would result.

"By reason of the vast interests of the

The inefficiency of our present personal tax system is pointed out, and the governor strongly urges the necessity of providing for some reasonable method of the taxation of credits generally, including stocks and bonds and moneys, all of which are presumed under our present law to bear a proportion of the taxation, but which almost entirely have escaped this burden. A graduated income tax has been suggested as a remedy, but the governor says if this is attempted it should be approached very cautiously. The subject of a graduated income, however, he considers worthy of honest and careful consideration

Attention is called to the recommendation of the state board of equalization in favor of levying an annual license tax on corporations, with the spirit of which the governor says he heartily concurs.

Mineral Leases.

"The state has a large area of land containing iron ore, and in the past has leased on terms wholly out of proportion to just and proper conditions. The statute now provides that from all iron ore taken from state lands the state shall receive a fixed royalty of 25 cents per ton, each ton to be reckoned at 2,240 pounds. In the light of the leases made between private parties this fixed sum is an absurdity, and should be changed without further delay. I would suggest that the provisions of the law be changed, fixing a minimum royalty on state leases of not less than 50 cents per ton, and authorizing a board consisting of the governor, attorney general and the state auditor to dispose of mineral leases at public auction to the highest bidder without fixing a maximum price by law."

Railroad Legislation.

"No problem with which you have to deal is of more vital concern to you and the people you represent than that of railway transportation, and a proper adjustment of transportation rates. Some idea of the importance of this question to the people of the state may be gathered from the fact that the total gross earnings of railroads within the State of Minnesota as reported by the companies to the railroad and warehouse commission for the year ending July 31, 1906, was $81,619,640.35. The gross earnings per mile of the railroads within this state were $10,263.28, and the net earnings per mile $5,165.06. The relative importance of this matter may be more clearly understood when we realize that the total gross earnings in Minnesota, being $81,619,640.35, is over 50 per cent of the estimated farm productions of 1906. The basis of our wealth is agriculture, and the total estimated agricultural products of Minnesota during the past year, including wheat, oats, corn, rye, barley, flax, potatoes, hay, butter, cheese, live stock, poultry, market garden, fruit and nursery products, is approximately $160,000,000. In other words, it required more than one-half of the agricultural products enumerated to satisfy the transportation demands of railroad corporations within the State of Minnesota.

Reduction of Freight Rates.

"The vast earnings of railway companies have been swollen by excessive rates of transportation, which have been higher in our own state than in the state south of us, or in Canada, to the north of us. There is a general and just demand that the people be relieved from the extortion and the abuse of high and unfair railroad rates of transportation.

"During the past biennial period efforts have been made by the board of railroad and warehouse commission looking toward a reduction of the rates of transportation, resulting in a reduction on merchandise rates, a voluntary reduction by some of the railroads in the matter of coal and grain rates. I am satisfied, however, that absolute justice has not yet been done to the people of the State of Minnesota. During the past year I caused to be made a complete tabulation of the prevailing rates of transportation between points on the several lines of railway within the State of Minnesota. Applying the Iowa distance tariff law to those rates I find that the shipper in Minnesota is paying a rate of transportation wholly without the bounds of justice and fairness, and to such an extent in my estimation as to retard the real progress of the people of our commonwealth.

"When we find the net earnings per mile of roads twice as great in Minnesota as in Iowa, and this, hand in hand with freight tariffs which in the main average 20 to 50 per cent higher, it is a fair presumption that the high net earnings of Minnesota roads are due in part to unjust and extortionate rates.

"The recent rate reductions are in the right direction. Compared, however, with grain rates in the Canadian provinces to the north of us and with Iowa merchandise rates to the south, it is apparent that Minnesota freight rates are still at too high a level, and especially in view of the enormously heavy tonnage passing over Minnesota roads from the several Northwestern states tributary to Minnesota distributing points.

"I would recommend the appointment of a joint legislative committee with a view of making a study of the prevailing conditions as to the various rates of transportation and establishing a distance tariff law, which will bring some measure of prompt relief. The people should not longer be compelled to pay great dividends on money that the people themselves have put into railroads by reason of excessive rates of transportation. They ought not to be compelled to pay a sum greater than that required to pay a legitimate and reasonable rate of interest and profit upon the actual value of railroad properties of the State of Minnesota. In addition to reduction of rates, stringent laws should be passed at this session of the legislature, in harmony with those of the general government pertaining to interstate commerce, which would serve to make impossible the granting of rebates and special privileges to classes in the handling of state business."

A Two Cent Passenger Rate.

"The time has come in our state when relief is also demanded in the matter of passenger rates. A maximum rate of 2 cents per mile should be fixed by law and fixed now. The public has demanded it; the public is right in making that demand, and the legislature should not defer action.

Abolition of Passes.

"The time has also come for some specific action in the matter of the enactment of law forbidding the granting of pass privileges by railroad corporations to people other than bona fide employes of railways and their families. So insistent have the people become in their demand for this reform that all of the several political organizations have been compelled to recognize the justice of the demand, and have incorporated planks in their various platforms looking toward the abolition of the pass system in the State of Minnesota. I urge most earnestly the early enactment of a law which will forever abolish the pass system in Minnesota."

The governor suggests the enactment of a reciprocal demurrage law, subjecting carriers to the same penalties for delay in furnishing cars as the carriers impose upon shippers for delay in loading cars. The conditions of so-called car shortage, which have afflicted this and neighboring states during the past ninety days, is pointed to as an illustration of the necessity for the passage of such a law.

The governor calls attention to the fact that the only way in which an order made by the railroad and warehouse commission can be enforced is by an application to the district court for a mandatory writ compelling the carrier to comply with the order. It is pointed out that the orders of the interstate commerce commission pertaining to rates under the new rate law, and of the Iowa railroad commission under the distance tariff law, are prima facie rates after a given day, notwithstanding appeal, and stand as such until the proper court has adjudicated otherwise. The governor declares that this should be the rule of law in Minnesota, if the orders of the commission are to have the authority and effective influence, which the general interests of the state demand.

Insurance.

The governor devotes considerable space to the subject of insurance. He says in part:

"Since the last session of the legislature, the subject of insurance, and life insurance in particular, has occupied a conspicuous place in the public mind and will no doubt receive your particular attention.

"Life insurance has grown to be of the highest importance. A large portion of the savings of the people are invested in it, and life insurance companies have under their control vast accumulations, the proper use and management of which is of grave concern and necessary to the public welfare.

"Great evils have grown up in connection with this very important phase of our industrial life; extravagant salaries and commissions have been paid; ambiguous, deceptive and often fraudulent contracts have been sold; colossal accumulations have been secured by adroitly conceived plans and used for the benefit of favored individuals, or hazarded in the doubtful conflicts waged by captains of finance in the money centers of the country. That all this has not been followed by great disaster is due to the wonderful resources of our land, and is not to the credit of those who have thus abused their trust.

"You will have available a mass of information which should prove of great assistance to you in arriving at just conclusions. The legislation of the State of New York, adopted as the result of the extensive and fearless investigation of this subject by the Armstrong committee of that state, should be upheld by the various states as far as possible.

"In February, 1906, a conference of governors, attorneys general and insurance commissioners was held at Chicago to consider and further the adoption of uniform insurance legislation. A committee appointed by that conference has given careful consideration to the subject since that date; its report will be before you, and I bespeak for it your most earnest consideration.

"The recommendations of the committee consist of seventeen proposed bills, which may be summarized as follows:

"The adoption of standard policies, or at least standard provisions in all policies, so that for the future ambiguous and fraudulent policies will be unknown and open competition between the companies introduced; the abolition of the deferred dividend system, to which is traced many of the evils to which I have referred; a compulsory accounting for present surplus held by companies heretofore operating upon the deferred dividend plan; regulation of salaries and investments, preservation of vouchers for expenditures, prohibiting of discrimination in provisions to secure complete publicity through annual reports are proposed as measures which, while leaving the details of the management to the officers of each company, will result in fair competition, ample security and proper use of funds, while frequent accountings and full publicity will force honest and economical management.

Trusts and Combinations.

"Section 5168 of the Revised Laws provides that no person or association of persons shall enter into any pool, trust agreement, combination or understanding whatsoever with a view of restraining trade within this state, or between the people of this or any other state, or country, which would tend in any way to limit, control, or maintain, or regulate the price of any article of trade, manufacture, or use within the state, or which might in any wise prevent or limit competition in the purchase and sale thereof; and also provides a serious penalty for a violation of this section of the statute.

"Although this statute has been in force and effect for several years there have been no prosecutions or punishments for violation of the law, though it is generally understood and as a matter of fact positively known that combinations in violation of this statute have been effected, and to such an extent as to menace the public welfare.

"I call your attention to the fact that the price of lumber of all kinds has gradually risen to a point where the building of homes and the use of lumber are almost prohibited. This is not due in any great measure to tariff conditions, nor to the decreased product of lumber, but is the direct result of combinations between manufacturers, jobbers, and even retailers; and while the statute provides that the attorney general and the several county attorneys shall begin and conduct actions and proceedings necessary to enforce the provisions of this section, or that any citizen may do so, no attempt has yet been made to destroy the monopolistic control of the lumber markets by those engaged in this industry. It is possible that no amendment to the statute is necessary other than to provide more specific provisions as to the boycott and to provide machinery by which the attorney general may institute proceedings against offenders of this section of the statute. I believe that an appropriation should be made and placed in the hands of the attorney general, to procure evidence upon which he could base a prosecution and enable him to carry out the provisions of the statute which is now mandatory in that he is directed to begin and conduct actions and proceedings necessary to enforce provisions of the statute.

"The attorney general advised us that the business of his office has increased many fold during the last two years. Suits are now pending directly involving more than one million dollars, and upon the successful outcome of this litigation depends a revenue to the state of many millions of dollars more. During the past two years there have been collected through the attorney general's department upwards of $300,000. Because of the volume of the business of this department, the attorney general and his assistants have been constantly occupied, and have been unable to keep up with the enormous press of business. I earnestly recommended the enlargement of the working force of the department, and provision by which this department may employ sufficient help from time to time, which will insure the performance of every needed duty as it should be done.

Primary Election Law.

"It is hardly necessary to call your attention to the need of some very important modification of our primary election law. It is urged, and not without some degree of reason, that the present primary election system cultivates perjury, fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, and a total disregard for our entire election system.

Some radical changes should be made in the present law to overcome some of the difficulties in the way of its successful operation. I believe the law would improved by providing that political parties through conventions might be permitted to nominate two or more candidates to be placed upon the election ballot, and to allow the people to choose between these nominations.

"A suggestion worthy of consideration is that nomination for the primary election, or the right of a citizen to have his name placed upon the ballot, should be by petition only.

"It has been suggested that improvement might be had by placing all the names upon one ballot and permitting the voter to vote whichever ballot he chose; providing, that he must vote for the names upon one of the tickets exclusively. There are many who advocate the extension of the primary election law so as to include state officers. While this is correct in theory, and should ultimately be accomplished, I believe that its extension to state officers should be deferred until the law is corrected in its application to its present field of operation. I would suggest the advisability of the appointment of a joint committee of the house and senate at the earliest possible moment to frame a new law and report to the legislature before the close of the session.

Labor Legislation.

"I desire to renew a previous suggestion to the legislature for legislation upon a subject which is of great interest to the working people of the state, and which is generally described as the common law doctrine as to the non-liability of a master to a servant for injuries occurring through the negligence of a fellow servant. The workman who is dependent upon his daily toil for the support of his family ought not to be called upon to assume the great risks of danger imposed by hazardous occupation, a risk which ought in all cases to be borne by the employer rather than the employe.

"Your attention is invited to the success that has attended the opening of a free employment agency under the auspices of the state labor department, and to the wisdom of an expansion of such free employment agencies.

"In connection with the subject of labor legislation, I also wish to submit to you the desirability of increasing the number of labor inspectors, not only for inspection of shops and factories, but for prevention of child labor and enforcement of the truancy laws, to the end that there may be an inspector in each of the nine congressional districts of the state.

Good Roads.

"The subject of better highways and of making good roads is still prominent in the public mind, and much more interest is being taken along this line than heretofore. We have come to recognize that the improvement of our public highways means better and more economical transportation facilities. The amendment to the constitution proposed by the last legislature relating to this question failed of passage by reason of the failure of a large number of the people of the state to vote upon this question. There was some opposition to the amendment by reason of the fact that the proposed amendment imposed certain limitations upon the legislature. I trust that provision will be made for the submission to the people of another amendment to the constitution, and that restrictions heretofore contained in the constitution be removed.

Drainage.

"The subject of drainage is one proper for your consideration at this time. Approximately 2,368,000 acres of the state holdings of 2,750,000 acres of school and state institutional land, which do include 60,000 acres not yet patented to the state, are wet for agricultural purposes. This large area is confined to thirty counties in Northern Minnesota; 90 per cent of the land being in Roseau, Cass, Itasca, St. Louis, Aitkin, Lake and Cook counties. With this immense area of low lands which the state is able to reclaim at a comparatively small cost, it would seem to be an excellent public policy that the most advanced methods for their reclamation be adopted and that Minnesota co-operate with any satisfactory plan proposed by the federal government for drainage.

"I am glad to be able to say that there is in Minnesota but one sentiment on the question of the wisdom of some plan of drainage, and I would urge liberality in appropriations to this end.

Forestry.

"Much of the land which has produced pine timber is available for agriculture, but some of it, from being rocky, hilly or very sandy, is only fit for growing timber. Nature alone will restore a portion of the latter with pine if fires are kept out, but a greater part of it will need to be planted. On such land it requires on an average about sixty years for pine to grow to merchantable size, and a businesslike beginning of reforestation should be made without further delay.

"The proper treatment of our forest resources is a matter of serious importance and merits your best thought.

Indian War Pensions.

"At the last session of the legislature a law was enacted providing pensions for certain people who served in the Indian war of 1862. The law carried an appropriation to provide for the payment of the pensions, but it is found that because of certain restrictions comparatively few are beneficiaries of the state's bounty. The law should either be repealed or so changed as to make all who are equally deserving able to share alike.

Initiative and Referendum.

"I would call your attention to the merits of the advisory initiative and referendum. This permits the people of a state, county, city, village or town to express their views upon questions affecting their organizations. The advisory initiative and referendum is but a step farther than the right of petition, and is not binding upon their officers. The enactment of a law providing for an advisory initiative and referendum can be accomplished without a constitutional amendment, and I am firmly of the opinion that such legislation is desirable.

Public Ownership.

"Public ownership of public utilities is fast becoming an accomplished fact in many of the cities and villages of the state. The expression of an advanced public opinion is found in our neighboring State of Illinois in the enactment of the so-called Muller law, which has been sustained in the courts, and applies in that state to the acquisition by municipalities of street railway properties. The idea is just and correct and its enactment in this state would undoubtedly have the effect of regulating in no small measure our privately owned public utilities, if not in acquiring them for the public use.

Public Institutions.

"Our state has been reasonably generous in the past in dealing with and caring for the unfortunate people committed to our public institutions. It is gratifying to note that in some of our institutions we have kept step with other states in the general progress and improvement over former conditions and methods. We have not yet attained that degree of perfection which would satisfy even ourselves, to say nothing of satisfying these who have made a scientific study of charities and corrections.

"Every needed facility should be afforded, and the various hospitals made to conform as largely as possible to the general hospital idea. At two of our insane hospitals nurses' dormitories are being erected, which when completed will to some extent relieve the congestion at those institutions. Provision should be made at this session of the legislature looking toward the construction of a companion building at the Rochester hospital.

"The board of control recommends the construction of a building for the detention of the criminal insane, with necessary legislation to make legal commitments and transfers thereto, and advocates a sufficient appropriation to maintain it. This recommendation should either be followed or provision should be made at the state prison for their detention there.

Dairy and Food Department.

"The laws intrusted to the dairy and food department for enforcement have been administered with the single purpose of accomplishing the ends sought by the legislature. The department has been governed by the policy, first, of rigidly enforcing the laws, and second, to educate the dealer as well as the consumer to a realization of the necessity of complete co-operation in all efforts looking toward the sale and consumption of pure foods, and while our laws are recognized to be as fully advanced, and perhaps more so, than those of other states, there are some deficiencies and some necessity for amendment to existing laws in order to make the work of this department still more effective.

State Prison.

During the past two years the state prison twine plant has been materially enlarged, the output amounting during this period to twenty-four and a half million pounds, which was sold at a price amounting to $750,000, while the state at the same time has made a net profit of $410,000, thus yielding during the two years a net profit to the state and the citizens thereof of more than $1,100,000. The past two years have been the most prosperous and beneficial since the twine plant was originated. The product has given general satisfaction, and the demand is still beyond the capacity of the plant.

The Lobbyist.

"In several of the states steps have already been taken to exclude the lobbyist from the halls of legislation, and eliminate one of the greatest evils to political economy and to political decency. Provision should be made, it seems to me, by which the current of popular will could not be turned from its proper channel by representatives of private interest who desire to overcome the rights of the public. While it will be impossible, perhaps, to totally prevent the lobbyist from intrusion, it could be accomplished to some extent by compelling corporations and individuals interested in legislation to register and be required to submit all arguments to committees instead of to individuals."

In conclusion the governor says:

"In your every effort to bring about a healthier and better state of governmental affairs I pledge you the hearty co-operation of my office, and assure you, as well, that I will be glad to welcome any suggestion calculated to promote the prosperity of our people and the general domestic welfare."

SPEND YOUR MONEY AT HOME.

How many men in Red Lake Falls ask for a home-made cigar when purchasing a smoke?

There are sold in this city every month about 30,000 cigars. Of this amount only one-fifth, are the local-made goods.

Every time a cigar made outside of Red Lake Falls is purchased by the citizens here it is a help to some one who does nothing for the city. It takes the money that belongs here and should be spent here, to other places.

If all the cigars sold in Red Lake Falls were manufactured at home it would mean a local factory employing ten men, instead of two as at present. Ten men with their families, added to the population of our city would mean a big increase in the money spent with merchants and all lines of business.

When there is a subscription to be taken up for any local affair, do the cigar dealers of outside towns contribute? Do they do anything to help our city? Do they put up one cent to help make the coming fire tournament a success?

The local factory does contribute; its employees spend their money at home: they patronize the local merchants, and in return it is not more than "a square deal" for every man in Red Lake Falls who smokes cigars to purchase the local made article. Buy home-made goods and "Watch Red Lake Falls Grow."

RE-APPORTIONMENT.

The following editorial of the St. Paul Dispatch shows the unequal division of senators and representatives as they are apporaioned at present. A letter from every voter in this district to your senator and representative would no doubt help to remedy this condition:

"How unequal has become the representation of the people in the congressional districts since the last apportionment of legislative districts, owing to the shifting of population, becomes apparent upon examination and comparison. We take the congressional districts to save space and because their arrangement does not impair the comparison. The legislative districts are not related in any way whatever to the congressional districts, but by alloting to counties combined with others to form a legislative district their fractional share in senatorial and representative delegations, the object is reached of presenting figures showing the inequality of legislative representation.

"Taking the congressional districts, their population and the number of senators and representatives in each, we have the following tabulated statement:

District.	Population	Senators	Representatives
First	207,205	10	16
Second	174,856	6½	11
Third	184,119	8	13
Fourth	249,555	6⅓	14
Fifth	292,806	7	16
Sixth	227,828	6½	10½
Seventh	196,325	7	12
Eighth	217,554	8	11
Ninth	226,155	5	13

"To present more forcibly this disposition let us tabulate the ratio of senators and representatives in each congressional district to the thousand of population. We have:

Ratio, 1 to 1,000 population.

District.	Senators	Representatives.
First	21,000	13,000
Second	28,000	15,900
Third	23,000	14,000
Fourth	39,000	17,800
Fifth	41,800	18,000
Sixth	33,000	21,000
Seventh	28,000	16,300
Eighth	27,200	19,800
Ninth	45,000	17,400

"As the shifting of population has been to the north the comparison can be made again by grouping congressional districts on east and west lines.

Districts.	Population	Sen.	Rep.
1, 2 and 3	507,070	24½	40
4 and 5	541,361	13⅓	30
6 and 7	424,153	13¾	22½
8 and 9	443,709	13	24

"These tables present some glaring inequalities in legislative weight. One senator in the First district has twice the representative power of a senator in the Ninth, and equal weight with the senator in the fifth, though he represents nearly a third less people. Or, taken by groups the senators of the first group have two times the weight of those of the second group though representing but 16,000 more people. The figures show striking inequalities in the house of representatives, though less so than in the senate. It is not a square deal when 13,000 people in the First district have as much legislative weight in the house as 21,000 in the sixth. These conditions seem to demand a remedy."

AMERICAN FORESTRY IS HONORED ABROAD

Forest Service Becomes a Member of the International Association of Forest Experiment Stations.

The Forest Service of the United States Government is to become a member of the International Association of Forest Experiment Stations. Other countries represented in the association are Germany, Austria, France, Italy, Russia, and Switzerland—the leading countries in the practice of scientific forestry. The purpose of the association is to standardize experimental work generally, so that the methods of investigation in each country will be uniform, and to collaborate in researches affecting two or more of the countries interested.

That Forest Service should be able to enter this association on equal terms with the European countries through whose researches, conducted for many years, a science of forestry has been built up is evidence of the rapid progress we are making in this science. Material development and the practical problems which it has presented have absorbed most of our energies, and our contribution to the world's progress along scientific lines has been in the field of invention and applied science rather than in discovery and research.

The science of forestry has until very lately been altogether foreign to us. It is hardly ten years since the first attempt to introduce scientific forestry upon American soil was made, and the opening of the Cornell School of Forestry in 1898 was a pioneer step in American education. Nor was it possible in this field to import a developed science and start abreast of European investigators by borrowing their results. Both the natural and the artificial conditions which determine forest utilization are so different from those found abroad that a new science had to be built up from its foundations.

Americans may well feel proud of the rapid progress made. That such results have been secured is primarily due to the liberality and foresight of Congress, which has steadily supported and provided for the work by increasing the appropriations as success has been attained and capacity for expanding usefulness has been proved. The country is fortunate in the outcome, for it is now in position to utilize wisely one of its greatest resources and to do what may be done to avert the national peril threatened by forest destruction. We have now a science and practice of forestry based upon American conditions, and are ready to enter upon the stage of higher scientific research with the other nations represented in the International Association.

Affiliation with foreign workers will materially aid us on the way toward further goals. Better and better methods of practical management can be devised as knowledge of the underlying scientific problems becomes fuller. The United States will profit also through the criticism of its published results by the older and more experienced foresters of Europe, since a part of the plan of co-operation is the mutual exchange and discussion of forest publications. The conventions of the association will give opportunity for the discussion of international problems, for personal contact with foreign leaders, and for promoting the feeling of fellowship among workers in a common field which helps to draw the whole civilized world together.

Foreign forestry will permit from our investigations, because no other country has so wide a variation in climate or such a wealth of forest flora as America. As we advance in knowledge of silviculture we shall place at the disposal of Europe facts which may well prove of importance for the management of European forests. New species will doubtless be made available for commercial use abroad, the vext problem of the influence of forests on climate should be brought toward solution, and new methods of practice will be brought to light.

Official recognition of the progress achieved in the experimental forestry in the United States was made in the invitation extended to the Forester by Dr. A. Buhler, Director of the Royal Wunttemberg Forest Testing Labratory at Tubingen, Germany. In his letter Doctor Bubler said: "In inviting the United States to join the association I am but expressing the general desire. You have accomplished so much and have taken so capable a hold on investigations that the work of the association would be furthered by your membership."

The Forester's letter of acceptance, approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, is in part as follows:

"The Forest Service has always been deeply interested in the admirable work of the European experimental stations, which have been such an important forestry from pure empirics to the position of a true science. Our own problems, though exceedingly vital to us, have until recently had only a limited, local interest and for this reason I thought best to refrain from participating in the general scientific work of the international association. Now, however, a number of wood-testing stations are well organized, other laboratory work is well under way, and the 127,000,000 acres of forest reserves with whose management the Forest Service is charged offer opportunities for many investigations which may contribute to the progress of our science.

"I shall therfore be very glad to have the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture become a member of the International Association of the Forest Experiment Stations, and promise as active participation in its work as circumstances will permit."

The Murray Cure

TO BE INCORPORATED AND ENLARGED BY MR. MURRAY'S FAMILY.

The announcement of the sudden death of Edwin Murray, founder of the Murray Cure at Minneapolis, Fargo and Seattle, was a shock to many thousands of people who knew of the good work of the Murray Cure.

Mr. Murray's family, the widow, two grown sons and a daughter, will continue to conduct the institute at Minneapolis. One of the sons has begun the study of medicine to fit himself as a drink cure specialist. In the meantime the house physicians and corps of attendants and employes will remain the same.

For over seven years the Murray Cure has demonstrated that the drink habit can be cured. If you have a friend that needs the Murray treatment, send him at once to the Murray Cure Institute. If the drink habit has a hold on you that you cannot break without help, remember we can help you

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XXVII.—Continued.

It came a fortnight later than the last. He was seated in the studio smoking his cigar and watching Alexis at work. He was watching critically and was eager to be of use.

"Come here!" he called, suddenly. "I think I can point you to an idea there. The idea of the naked blade is good and the fact that it hangs a little out of the perpendicular is good, because it indicates the strenuous hold upon it. But don't you see that if it hung just so much the other way it would form a perfect foil to that deep fold in the drapery which it over-accentuates just now? You want a divergance from that line—not a confirmation of it."

"H'm!" said Alexis, standing back to look. "I don't know. There's a certain straight simplicity in what I've got. Take your coat off, old man, and show me exactly what you mean. There's a blouse hanging there in the corner."

Aloysius rose, removed his coat, turned back the cuffs of his shirt, and assumed the characteristic toga of the modeller in clay.

"I sha'n't damage the skeleton?" he asked.

"Oh, no!" said Alexis. "The framework is all properly jointed. It'll stand the angle you want, any way."

Aloysius set to work. The joint went rustily, and some of the clay broke or slid from the grasping hand, but he repaired the mischief with dexterous fingers, and roughly readjusted the modelling of the blade which he had destroyed in altering its posture.

"Yes," said Alexis, "that's distinctly better."

"About that head now," said Aloysius. "You haven't got quite the pose I wanted. Pass me those steps, and, whilst I'm at it, I'll show you what I mean."

Alexis brought the steps and he mounted them nimbly with a lump of clay in one hand, which he clapped on Boadicea's shoulder like an epaulette.

"I broke the lady's neck last night," said Alexis. "You'll find her ductile. That's it. I see it better from here than you can. That's it to a hair. But it minimizes the value of that wave in the mane. Just lay on the eighth of an inch."

"These eyes," said Aloysius. "Hand me a tool, Alex."

His cousin passed a boxwood gouge to him and he labored for a minute. Then, after a bit of delicate modelling at the eyelid, he ran down the ladder and crossed the room, where he laid a hand on Alex's shoulder.

Aloysius had dropped the boxwood tool into a pocket of the blouse, and, feeling for it with intent to set it in its place, he brought out something else with it. His hand was still upon his cousin's shoulder, and Alexis felt him start violently. The eyes of the two men fixed on the same object and they met for one second. Aloysius held in his hand a small blue phial, labelled in red ink, "Poison. Chloroform."

"Great heaven!" gasped the younger man, and shrank and cowered.

The phial fell from the elder's hand and cracked upon the floor. The choking, sickly odor of the drug rose pungently. They looked at each other once again, Aloysius with a gaze of accusation and horror, Alexis with a furtive terror which shrank away. that glance told all, and they parted without one further word.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The day for the trial of Aloysius Brangwyn came at last, and on a bright October morning he stepped into the dock at the Old Bailey and bowed to the presiding judge. The court was thronged, and amongst the audience were a hundred ladies of the highest fashion, artists by the score, and a great gathering of barristers and journalists. The prisoner himself was less the center of interest than the case. The Brangwyn mystery, which had from time to time startled and bewildered Great Britain, was to be solved at last.

The action of the crown at the preliminary hearing had prepared everybody to anticipate a merely formal sentence, and Aloysius was secure in the sympathy of every person in the crowded chamber. He had, indeed, something of the martyr's halo about him, and as he stepped upon the scene a murmur filled the court. He was unchanged to those who knew him, the same settled and unalterable sadness. He was attired in his usual scrupulous fashion, and looked, as he had always done, a gentleman in heart and mind. There was not a man of equally fine distinction in all that assembly, and the hearts of the women moved half in pity and half in worship. Billery had secured a place for Lilian and sat beside her.

The usher called for silence, the clerk read out the indictment, a plea of "not guilty" was entered, and the case began. The attorney general passed lightly over the familiar details of the case, the disappearance of Aloysius Brangwyn, the complete obscurity in which it had rested for seven years—the astonishing discovery of the body after all that time, unchanged, unaged.

"The Crown is indebted for the solution of this portion of the problem," said the attorney general, "to the ingenuity of a member of the press. He observed that when the water was pumped out of the flooded cellar in which the body of the unfortunate gentleman was discovered a deposit was left upon the floor which appeared to him to be very different from that which would be left by an ordinary Thames flood. He secured a portion of that deposit. He submitted it to examination, and he was led to the conclusion that it was mainly composed of modeling clay—the earth used by sculptors in the earlier stages of their work. Now, at that time, as is a matter of common knowledge, the prisoner now before the court was suspected of complicity in the actual crime of murder. He has been able to triumphantly rebut that suspicion, and so entirely to the satisfaction of the legal advisers of the crown, that no shadow of it can henceforth approach him."

At this there was a tumult of applause in court, which the ushers strove in vain to quell. It rose in such volumes that the members of the unthinking mob, which thronged the street outside, took it as the result of a verdict of acquittal and roared themselves hoarse with premature rapture. The business of the court was suspended for full five minutes.

"I do not wish," said the judge, when it was once more possible to proceed, "I do not wish too severely to reprehend an outburst of popular sympathy which is so evidently sincere, but it is my duty to say that this is not the place for it, and to warn you that on any renewal of it the court will at once be cleared."

"The point to which I was about to draw attention when I was interrupted by that extraordinary demonstration," resumed the attorney general, "was this. The prisoner, over whom, as I must insist in impressing upon the jury, a charge still hangs second only in importance to that of which he has cleared himself, was the center of widely-spread suspicion. He is himself a sculptor, and, as all who are interested in the art of this country are aware, has achieved considerable eminence in his profession. At the time of the disappearance of the deceased there was in the studio, in which he had for some time worked, a colossal plaster statue of Boadicea, and the theory offered to the crown, which has been since verified beyond any reasonable doubt, was that the body of the deceased had been interred within the mass of this statue whilst the clay was still in a workable condition; that it had been preserved from decay by the entire exclusion of atmospheric air; that, at the time at which the house of the murdered man was dismantled, this statue had been conveyed to the house in Agar Row in which the body was ultimately found; and that the water of an unusually high tide, flooding the cellar in which it had been deposited, had liquified the statue, and thus revealed the body of the dead, so strangely preserved for identification seven years after the commission of the murder."

It was of no use for the judge to command silence, or for the officers of the court to endeavor to enforce it. So loud a hum of amazement at this disclosure filled the chamber that any single voice was drowned in it. But the crowd's eagerness to learn of the means by which the prisoner had cleared himself, and the expectation of revelations yet to come, helped in a little while to secure a return to silence.

"There is one thing which, as I conceive, deserves to be said in behalf of those trusted and intelligent officers of the detective force who were engaged in the inquiry into the disappearance of the deceased. Why, it may be asked, did they pass by so obvious a hiding place for the body of the man of whom they were in search? My lord, and gentlemen of the jury, the skilful, guilty hand of the real murderer had worked upon the statue with such tremendous and well-guided haste before the alarm was given that it was simply impossible for any man to guess that the person who had vanished from human view so short a time before could possibly be hidden beneath its stately and imposing folds. And, moreover, before it was thought necessary to effect a complete examination of the house the outer clay had hardened to such a consistency that, as I am assured by experts, it would be quite natural for anybody other than an expert to suppose that the work had been in existence as it then stood for the space of many weeks, or even months.

"I have thought it advisable to meet in advance a suggestion which easily might have been made to the detriment of a body of servants of the state who very rarely fall short in the execution of their duty, and who far oftener excite our admiration by their perspicacity, their adroitness, their courage, and their skill."

Through all this Lilian sat with a feeling of growing horror and conviction. She had come here to witness the clearance of Aloysius—his final triumph—and to rejoice with him in his emergence. And it was too, too clear that the triumph was to be reached only through the fastening of the crime upon Alexis. Who, other than Alexis, could have owned that "skilful, guilty hand" of which the great advocate had spoken? But the motive? Already installed in his uncle's house, established there as a favored companion, the supposed heir to the greater portion of his wealth, what could have induced Alexis to perpetrate such a crime? No. It could not be Alexis.

"And now, gentlemen of the jury, it is my duty to call your attention to the grounds on which we base our charge against the prisoner. For seven years he suspected the real author of the crime. It is not for us to take into consideration any other question than the one which will be submitted to you by his lordship in the charge which he will shortly address to you Was the prisoner, Aloysius Brangwyn now seated in the dock before you, at any time in possession of an absolute knowledge of the truth about this ghastly business? Was it at any time in his power to secure the execution of justice in respect to one of the most foul and sordid crimes of modern days, and did he wilfully, and with his eyes wide open to the consequences of his own acts, refuse to do his duty?

"Gentlemen, on the prisoner's own confession, and in the document I now hold in my hand, there is ample proof of that. This, gentlemen"—he shook in the air one of the documents in which Aloysius had looked upon the memoried record of the past—"this is a detailed account of the crime itself, the manner in which it was committed, the motives which prompted it, and the means which were employed to conceal it, written by the hand of the criminal himself and signed by him. This full confession, which in every particular confirmed suspicions which had been nurtured by the prisoner for a great length of time, has been in his possession for a year. It was his duty, his bounden duty, to reveal the existence of this document to the police, and he has placed himself in the peril in which he now stands solely by his neglect to fulfil that duty.

"Gentlemen, the unhappy individual who has to answer a charge which has many a time in the annals of English law been held to be undistinguishable from the crime of wilful murder itself, and has many a time drawn down an equal punishment, that unhappy gentleman, I say, who stands here in legal peril of his life, has a cousin. The document I now hold in my hand bears that cousin's signature."

There was a commotion in the body of the court. A lady had fainted at the eminent counsel's last words, and had fallen forward in the narrow space between her and the person who sat one seat nearer to the speaker. A dozen hearers had thrilled to the low but eloquent moan with which she had fallen. The gentleman who accompanied her had seized her by the waist and was attempting to raise her. Everybody about them stood up. People beyond them stoond upon the seats. Once again the proceedings were suspended, and with infinite difficulty the unconscious lady's escort made a way with her to the fresher air of the corridor. It was noticed by many that during this episode the prisoner stood up with an air of solicitude and distress, and that when it was over he abandoned the air of impassivity he had hitherto worn, and sat with his face sunk in the shelter of his hands.

BURNT CLAY FOR HIGHWAYS.

Good Roads Made From Gumbo in the State of Mississippi.

Congress some time ago established an office of public roads, which is instructed to conduct experiments and devise methods for improving the roads of the United States. The office has done a great deal to arouse interest throughout the country in the necessity of good roads and has originated several means of making good roads economically. The latest discovery is that of burning clay roads in Mississippi.

In large areas in the south, particularly in the valleys of the Mississippi and its tributaries, sedimentary clays are found very generally. In these areas there is little or no sand and the clays are of a particular plastic and sticky variety. These sticky clays are locally known as "gumbo" and "buckshot." In such localities traffic is absolutely impossible during the wet season, as the wheels of heavy vehicles will sink to the hub.

The clay is black, owing to the high percentage of organic of vegitable matter it contains. It is particularly sticky in its nature and is almost wholly free from sand and grit. After it has been burned, however, the plasticity is destroyed and a light clinker formed, which, though not particularly hard, when pulverized forms a smooth surface and seems to wear well.

Prospects.

"It seems my daughter is determined to marry you," said old Roxley, sternly. "Now, see here! I'm told you're a regular beer guzzler."

"Well," replied the bold youth, "I admit I've been used to my share of beer, but all that'll be changed when I'm married."

"Ah!"

"Yes. I'll be able to afford wine then."

Love's Lights and Shadows.

"Believe me, Madeleine, when I am away from you I am thinking every minute of your blue eyes and of your lovely fair hair."

"Bah! I am sure you said the same thing to another girl before me."

"Madeleine, don't be cruel. I swear solemnly that you are wrong. The girl before you was dark."

WOMAN'S SPHERE

Cushions Adapted to All Moods

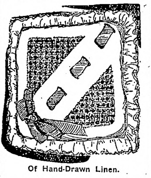
MANY STYLES IN THESE ESSENTIAL COMFORTS.

Probably the Most Desirable Are Those Made of Washable Materials—Forms of Embroidery That Make Pretty Decorations.

Cushions of one sort or another are essential comforts, not luxuries.

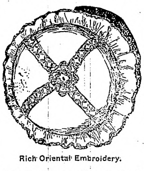
The sybarite knows full well that there are cushions to suit varying moods. Among them are relentless hair-stuffed ones which spur the idle to deeds of great endeavor, and there are cushions downy and luxurious to the touch adapted for restful, idle moments following strenuous days and gayeties of the night before, that soothe and calm.

Again, there are cushions for the floor, for chairs, headrests, divans, window seats, daintily scented ones for bedroom couches, hand-painted ones for drawing rooms, and severe, sedate affairs of leather for the library. There is a certain class of pillows that appeal to boys; another in which young girls delight; and, as for the inmates of the nursery, there is a score of the dearest, quaint little ones which, in some cases match the nursery wall paper. Mary with her little lamb, barn yard scenes, besides the picturesque Kate Greenaway scenes that have never been equaled by others captivate childish fancies.



Of Hand-Drawn Linen.

There is nothing more rich or utilitarian then a velvet cushion, plain or relieved by some simple form of decoration. Cushions of striped velvet are new and obtainable in many very effective color schemes. These are especially pretty in the new circular shapes, and, of course, do not require any ornamentation.



Rich Oriental Embroidery.

Cushions requiring little work are those tinted then outlined with the long and short stitch.

This style of cushion is in a class by itself, but really more desirable from a sanitary point of view are these of washable materials. These are of fine linen hand-embroidered lingerie delicacies with their softly tinted slips, coarse linen variously treated with odd grades of silk and cotton thread, worked in all sorts of handiwork. Brodiere anglaise, drawn work, inset with laces, Filet, Cluny Valenciennes, overlaid with heavy laces chocret motifs or worked in any of the fashionable embroidery patterns, Breidheimer being especially liked for its simple effective beauty, are all included in the effective means of decorating.

Novel Ideas in Entertainments

"Artist" Luncheon a Pleasing Form of Entertainment.

There were six art students who had been together for several years and this luncheon was given one of the party on the eve of her departure for Europe.

The centerpiece was a plaster cast of "Psyche" and the candle sticks were of china in the shape of tall white columns. The name cards were on little easels and each was decorated with a tiny water-color sketch. Candy shaped palettes were the bonbons with natural little dabs of colored candy paint.

A beautiful sketch book was given the guest of honor in which each friend had written a sentiment and made a tiny thumb nail drawing.

A "Find" Party.

The invitations were issued in the usual way for an evening party. When the guests had arrived they were informed that 50 articles had been lost within the confines of three rooms. A list of the missing objects was furnished each person. A reward was offered for four different things; a silver spoon, gold thimble, a brass tray and a lace handkerchief.

A half hour was allowed for the search, and such fun—finally everything was brought to light except the lace handkerchief which was at last traced to the folds of the white lace curtains. Some of the articles hidden were tiny wooden boxes filled with bon-bons, toys, an orange, apple, piano (toy one), a baby (doll), clothes pin, etc.

Progressive Candy Jack Straws.

Provide a quarter of a pound of twisted candy sticks known as "opera" sticks in most candy shops. They come in all colors and there must be a different color for each table, four at a table. A pair of candy tongs must be in readiness for each player and a box for containing the candy "straws." The game is to see how many sticks may be withdrawn from the pile without breaking or throwing the pile into confusion. Progressions are made and the score kept.

Prizes are awarded consisting of candy canes, pipes, cigarettes, etc., for the men, and fancy candy favors for the girls. Children enjoy this entertainment and eating the sticks won is permissible.

To Announce an Engagement.

The bride-elect had lived in the community all her life, so this manner of telling the world of the important event in her life was a very pretty way of making the announcement.

Her sister, who was married, invited ten of the girl's most intimate friends to a luncheon, and there was nothing unusual in the preparations to indicate the announcement forthcoming. When the coffee was served in the drawing room, the hostess said she had a short original story to read, in which she though the guests would be interested.

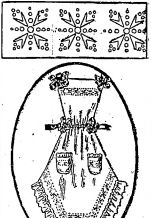
Then followed a cleverly written resume of the girl's life from babyhood under an assumed name. As the events were related light began to dawn, but no one said a word until the story was finished, then congratulations were in order and a silver loving cup was passed, in which was some rare old wine, only used to drink the health of some member of the family on the occasion of a great even in their lives. Some of this sparkling liquor had been used when the mother of the bride-elect was married and at the chirstening of the baby daughter. The bride's health would be drunk at the wedding and then the rare old product would be put away to await the next important family event.

MADAME MERRI.

PRETTY AND DAINTY APRON.

Made from Straight Length of Linen and Shirred.

Dainty aprons are once more worn by "milady" as well as by her maid; owing to the demands of chafing dish and fancy work. A unique work apron that draws up into a bag, and which is a pretty departure from the one of older popularity, already has been drawn, and this pretty fancy for the chafing dish is unique in being made from a straight length of linen, which is shirred down to the figure by ribbons. It is narrow, as should be all fanciful aprons—else they make the wearer look lage—and is decorated with ribbon and an embroidery pattern.



Royal Blue and Olive Green.

Royal blue velvet trimmings on gowns of dark olive green cloth represent quite the last sensation in the Parisian world of dress. The blue is designed in as bright a shade as it is possible to imagine, while the green is very subdued in tone and has an almost coppery tint in its composition.

AN IMPORTANT CASE

Patient Cured of Ataxia Gives the Entire Credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mrs. S. C. Wellock, of 114 Cleveland Avenue, Everett, Mass., the wife of an employe in the government works at Chelsea, says:

"I had been troubled with nervousness for ten years and the disease kept growing on me. Then I learned that I was suffering from locomotor ataxia. I had terrible tremblings in my right leg which would get rigid and when this happened in the street I had to stand still until it passed away to keep from falling. My right arm felt as if a thousand needles were pricking it. The sheet touching my knee in bed would nearly cause me to scream out with pain and both knees were so weak I could hardly stand.

"I had to use a cane and be helped about by my son. Then the pain began to settle in the calves of my legs and the muscles became numb and quivered constantly. The cords under my knees seemed to be drawn up tight and the terrible shooting pains in my legs would nearly drive me insane. My toes became numb and at times would prickle as if needles were being thrust into them. My eyes became dull and black spots floated before them. My heart was very weak.

"My attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I bought several boxes right away and soon felt relief. I was so pleased that I kept on taking them until they cured me entirely, and I have had no symptoms of the trouble for over a year."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. A booklet, entitled "Nervous Disorders," sent free on request.

BIG HIGH PRESSURE PUMP.

One Used in Hydraulic Mining in Oregon a Wonder.

The biggest high pressure pump in the world is installed in the Dry Diggings placer fields of Southern Oregon on Rogue river and is used to operate a battery of hydraulic monitors in the mines. This pump is one of the largest pieces of mining machinery ever manufactured and could never have been installed but for the fact that it was dumped directly from the cars to the foundation prepared for it in the mines.

The pump was built in San Francisco and was one of the last jobs done by the company before the earthquake and fire. The pump is of the five-step centrifugal type and it weighs, aside from bearings and gears, just 70,000 pounds. Other pumps have been built that lift as great a volume of water as does this one, but they do not deliver it under such enormous pressure. This pump is tested to withstand a maximum pressure of 250 pounds to the square inch.

Its capacity is 13,000,000 gallons in twenty-four hours, or 9,000 gallons a minute. This enormous volume is delivered through a half mile of pipeline, the pipe being of steel, twenty-two inches in diameter. The water is lifted to a height of 100 feet and forced through two four-inch nozzles, hurling streams a distance of 500 feet. These powerful streams are played upon the mountain walls to tear down the gold-bearing gravel.

BLOATED WITH DROPSY.

The Heart Was Badly Affected When the Patient Began Using Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Elizabeth Maxwell, of 415 West Fourth street, Olympia, Wash., says: "For over three years I suffered with a dropsical condition without being aware that it was due to kidney trouble. The early stages were principally backache and bearing down pain, but I went along without worrying much until dropsy set in. My feet and ankles swelled up, my hands puffed and became so tense I could hardly close them. I had great difficulty in breathing, and my heart would flutter with the least exertion. I could not walk far without stopping again and again to rest. Since using four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills the bloating has gone down and the feelings of distress have disappeared."

WEIGHING OF PLANETS.

They Are Estimated as "Masses" by the Astronomers.

If a ham weighing thirty pounds were taken up to the moon and weighed there, the "pull"—the attractive force of the moon upon the ham—would amount to five pounds. There would be another weight of the ham for the planet Mars, and yet another on the sun. A ham weighing thirty pounds at New York ought to weigh some 800 pounds on the sun's surface. Hence the astronomer does not speak of the weight of a planet, because that would depend upon the place where it was weighed. But he speaks of the mass of the planet, which means how much planet there is, no matter where it might be weighed.

At the same time we might, without any inexactness, agree that the weight of a heavenly body should be fixed by the weight it would have in New York. As we could not imagine a planet in New York, because it may be larger than the earth itself, what we are to imagine is this. Suppose the planet could be divided into a million million million equal parts and one of these parts brought to New York and weighed. We could easily find its weight in pounds or tons. Then multiply this by a million million million, and we shall have a weight of the planet. This would be equivalent to what astronomers might take as the mass of the planet.

NEVER TIRES

Of the Food That Restored Her to Health.

"My food was killing me and I didn't know the cause," writes a Colo. young lady. "For two years I was thin and sickly, suffering from indigestion and inflammatory rheumatism.

"I had tried different kinds of diet, plain living, and many of the remedies recommended, but got no better.

"Finally, about five weeks ago, mother suggested that I try Grape-Nuts, and I began at once, eating it with a little cream or milk. A change for the better began at once.

"To-day I am well and am gaining weight and strength all the time. I've gained 10 lbs. in the last five weeks and do not suffer any more from indigestion and the rheumatism is all gone.

"I know it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. I still eat the food twice a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The flavor of Grape-Nuts is peculiar to itself. It is neutral, not too sweet and has an agreeable, healthful quality that never grows tiresome.

One of the sources of rheumatism is from overloading the system with acid material, the result of imperfect digestion and assimilation.

As soon as improper food is abandoned and Grape-Nuts is taken regularly, digestion is made strong, the organs do their work of building up good red blood cells and of carrying away the excess of disease-making material from the system.

The result is a certain and steady return to normal health and mental activity. "There's a reason." Read the little book "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

The Poverty of Lady Isabel

By Mrs. Neish

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Lady Isabel is one of those essentialy feminine-looking women who appeal to you by reason of their obvious and inimitable helplessness.

I use the word "inimitable," since the helplessness is merely a carefully acquired attribute, the result of much painstaking and innate art.

I was busy writing letters when Lady Isabel called me into her room and asked me if I could come out with her at once and do some shopping.

"Do come, dear," she pleaded, "it's your duty to your hostess; besides, I'm going to walk—it's so good for one's skin to walk out of doors—and I simply detest going about by myself."

This was only natural; she was so fair and youthful, and so utterly and childishly dependent, that I almost wondered how she dared cross the road alone.

"Aren't you taking Babs?" I asked; "she dearly loves a walk with us."

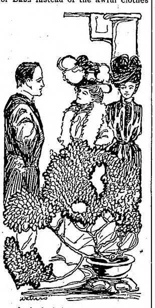
Isabel regretfully dismissed the idea of bringing her little girl. "No! poor Babs hasn't anything fit to go out with me in. Nurse makes her outdoor coats so abominably." She glanced unconsciously at her own elegant garment. "But I shall take Minto; he wants a new coat, and I am going to get him some of those boots I hear they keep at Purlam's."

"Really," I said; "but do dogs wear boots, Isabel?"

"Oh, I don't know," she replied, easily. "No, I suppose not, but he must have them; he needn't wear them, of course—but they are so cheap. Poor Minto!" she added, irrelevantly.

"And poor Babs," I murmured under my breath.

She caught the words. "Yes, I do wish I could afford some nice things for Babs instead of the awful clothes nurse makes for her. It's hateful being poor, Marjorie," she added.



Lady Isabel Grew Petulant.

She fixed an expensive picture hat on her head as she spoke, and took a pair of long white gloves from her drawer. They were lined with blue, and I ventured to admire them.

"Yes; aren't they nice," she said, as she handed me one to see. "I had six pairs made to order the other day."

Isabel's first visit was to a large automobile firm, where she interviewed the manager. She said she wished to see two motor cars, one for a friend, a countess, for whom she had offered to choose a car, and the other for her brother-in-law, who was in Egypt at present, but who wished his car to be built while he was away, so that it might be ready for the bride he was bringing home.

"Lady F—— will, of course, come and choose hers herself, and I am only looking at it for her, as I know so exactly the kind of thing she wants."

The man bowed and said he hoped to please her ladyship, and thought he had the exact car she would require; and he begged us to step for a moment "this way."

When all was arranged we turned to go.

"Oh, by the way," said Lady Isabel, the helplessness becoming exceedingly apparent, "what will my commission be?"

The manager did not move a muscle of his face. "We are not in the habit of paying commission to private ladies," he said quietly.

"Oh, well, of course there are other places where one can buy motor cars," said Lady Isabel, looking pathetically first at me and then at a small address-book in her hand.

"If you will kindly wait a moment, your ladyship, I will ask the senior partner to come and speak to you," replied the manager, and pulled forward two chairs for our use as he spoke.

* * * * *

"Fancy their giving you so much as all that, Isabel," I said, as we emerged once more into the noisy street. "Didn't it make you feel very uncomfortable—what he said. I mean?"

"Uncomfortable?" she echoed in amazement. "No, of course not, why should it? It was a greater bother for me to choose them; I only did it out of pure good nature, and, after all—one has to live."

I began to wonder how the trade would live if the female aristocracy took to commerce.

"I just want to look in at Pont street, Marjorie," said Lady Isabel presently. "It's horribly out of the way; but I must see little Mrs. Barrington-Brown for a moment to-day."

"Who on earth is Mrs. Barrington-Brown?"

"Oh, she is a perfect income to poor little me," said Lady Isabel with an infantile sigh of deep content. "She is one of those nice 'new' women who is paying ever so much to get in with us."

"Really; and do you select her motor cars?"

"Oh, yes, of course, but she has only had two at present; but she goes to Felice to buy her clothes, and he almost dresses me in consequence: it's such a comfort and such a help—"

"It must be," I said; "and does he dress little Babs as well?"

She stared at me. "No, he doesn't build children's dresses—at least, I don't think he does, although, to tell the truth, I have not asked him. Besides, it might mean he wouldn't make so many for me."

"No," I rejoined dryly, "I suppose he wouldn't—not quite so many."

"On arriving at Pont street we were ushered with much ceremony into Mrs. Barrington-Brown's magnificent drawing-room, when Mrs. Barrington-Brown came hurrying into the room, looking very happy if rather flushed.

There was a shade of languor in Lady Isabel's manner as she turned and greeted her.

"I have just looked in," she said, in a pretty tired voice, "as I happened to be passing by your house, and I wanted to ask you to come to my little party on Tuesday next. Quite a small party," she continued; "only Princess Bertini and Lord Eberstone, and Sir Frederick Stole and ourselves."

Mrs. Barrington-Brown flushed deeply, and murmured she would be delighted.

"Then that's all right," said Lady Isabel gaily, and she led the conversation—very skilfully, I thought—into nearer housekeeping channels.

"Your house always looks so clean, dear Mrs. Barrington-Brown," she murmured sadly, and added, "I never can understand how you do it—but, of course, you've got heaps and heaps of servants. By the way," she went on, "that reminds me, talking of things looking clean, I know of such a delightful laundry. Do try it. They are rather expensive people"—Mrs. Barrington-Brown rose to take the address—"but you won't mind that I know, if they are really good; and they do all the Princess Bertini's things—and ours, of course. They really do things very well."

"I did not know you were such a keen housekeeper, Isabel; it was kind of you to recommend a laundry," I said admiringly, as we reached the street once more.

Lady Isabel shook her muff and carefully smoothed the fur. "Well, you see, dear, they pay me 30 per cent. on every one I send them," she said; "and so I really think we might afford a hansom," she added cheerfully, as she hailed one with a graceful movement of her head.

"Robertson's," she said, and we drove up to a large and well-known linen-draper's. Lady Isabel took some small beaded chains from the fancy bag in her hand.

"I want you to sell these for me," she murmured, showing them to the shopwalker in the fancy department. "I am selling them for a friend—a charity, you know—a lady who has lost all her money, and makes them herself; she only wants 35 shillings each."

The shopwalker shook his head. "I am sorry, your ladyship, but all this kind of thing is done on the premises or bought in the city, and costs us less than half your friend is asking."

Lady Isabel looked plaintive. "She is so poor," she pleaded.

"I fear it is quite impossible," he repeated firmly. "I am very sorry, but we never do anything of the kind."

Lady Isabel grew petulant. "Whatever is the good of my dealing at a shop of this class"—this with the inimitable impertinence that sometimes marks the smart lady—"if you cannot do a little thing like that for so old a customer!"

He hesitated. "I will tell you what we will do, your ladyship," he said politely. "we will take these, as there are only six, and put them in with our own, and try to sell them for you—to oblige you, your ladyship."

Lady Isabel became helplessly grateful. "Will you really; how very, very good of you. And you will be sure and sell them for me, won't you? And send me the money, so that I may send it on to her at once; she will be so delighted. Thank you so much. Yes—the handkerchief, department, please."

Having purchased one small cambric handkerchief for Babs, we then left the shop.

"How nice of him to take them," said Lady Isabel with enthusiasm "Wasn't it nice of him—and he will be sure to sell them, I know he will. I can tell by his eye; wasn't it lucky I thought of going?"

"Very," I replied, "but who is the friend?" Lady Isabel hailed another hansom and stepped lightly in, while I carefully withheld her dress from the wheel, and then quickly seated myself by her side.

"Charity," she replied with a sigh of relief, having finished her morning's work at last. "Charity, my dear Marjorie, begins at home!"

Remember This.

Saving comes too late when you get to the bottom.—Seneca.

What is Pe-ru-na?

Is it a Catarrh Remedy, or a Tonic, or is it Both?

Some people call Peruna a great tonic. Others refer to Peruna as a great catarrh remedy.

Which of these people are right? Is it more proper to call Peruna a catarrh remedy than to call it a tonic?

Our reply is, that Peruna is both a tonic and a catarrh remedy. Indeed, there can be no effectual catarrh remedy that is not also a tonic.

In order to thoroughly relieve any case of catarrh, a remedy must not only have a specific action on the mucous membranes affected by the catarrh, but it must have a general tonic action on the nervous system.

Catarrh, even in persons who are otherwise strong, is a weakened condition of some mucous membrane. There must be something to strengthen the circulation, to give tone to the arteries, and to raise the vital forces.

Perhaps no vegetable remedy in the world has attracted so much attention from medical writers as HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS. The wonderful efficacy of this herb has been recognized many years, and is growing in its hold upon the medical profession. When joined with CUBEBS and COPAIBA a trio of medical agents is formed in Peruna which constitutes a specific remedy for catarrh that in the present state of medical progress cannot be improved upon. This action, reinforced by such renowned tonics as COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS, CORYDALIS FORMOSA and CEDRON SEED, ought to make this compound an ideal remedy for catarrh in all its stages and locations in the body.

From a theoretical standpoint, therefore, Peruna is beyond criticism. The use of Peruna confirms this opinion. Numberless testimonials from every quarter of the earth furnish ample evidence that this judgment is not over enthusiastic. When practical experience confirms a well-grounded theory the result is a truth that cannot be shaken.

To most men's minds an ideal wife is that of an acquaintance who is said to spoil her husband.

ALMOST A SOLID SORE.

Skin Disease from Birth—Fortune Spent on Her Without Benefit—Cured Her with Cuticura.

"I have a cousin in Rockingham Co. who once had a skin disease from her birth until she was six years of age. Her father had spent a fortune on her to get her cured and none of the treatments did her any good. Old Dr. G—— suggested that he try the Cuticura Remedies which he did. When he commenced to use it the child was almost a solid scab. He had used it about two months and the child was well. I was there when they commenced to use your Cuticura Remedies. I stayed that week and then returned home and stayed two weeks and then went back and stayed with them two weeks longer, and when I went home I could hardly believe she was the same child. Her skin was as soft as a baby's without a scar on it. I have not seen her in seventeen years, but I have heard from her and the last time I heard from her she was well. Mrs. W. P. Ingle, Burlington, N. C., June 16, 1905."

Bella—No, but she crosses them several times after she has gone over them.

Safe, Sure and Speedy.

No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as Allcock's Plasters. They are safe because they contain no deleterious drugs and are manufactured upon scientific principles of medicine. They are sure because nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purposes for which a plaster is required. They are speedy in their action because their medicinal qualities go right to their work of relieving pain and restoring the natural and healthy performance of the functions of muscles, nerves and skin.

Allcock's Plasters are the original and genuine porous plasters and like most meritorious articles have been extensively imitated, therefore always make sure and get the genuine.

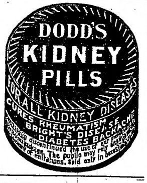
HANDIWORK OF QUEENS.

Pictures and Carving, All From Royal Hands, on Exhibition in Brussels.

An exhibition has been opened at Brussels consisting entirely of the handiwork of queens. There are several landscapes painted by Queen Amelia of Portugal.

The Queen of Roumania, "Carmen Sylva," exhibits a great number of miniature statuettes carved in ivory. These are busts of Bourget, Loti, Ibsen, Maeterlinck and various other literary celebrities.

The queen of Holland is represented by a series of cartoons illustrating the stories in the "Arabian Nights," in the designing of which she has whiled away her leisure. The young queen of Spain has a number of bird and flower pictures in water color. The queen of Italy, who has a passion for the sea, sends several Mediterranean scenes which are remarkable for their brilliant coloring.



WHAT IS A "WINDFALL?"

You Have to Go Back to William the Conqueror to Get Story.

The origin of the expression "windfall," which is used when one wishes to refer to a streak of good luck, dates back to the time of William the Conqueror. At that time it was a criminal offense to cut timber in the British forests without royal consent. All that could be gathered for fuel or other purposes was such limbs as the wind should happen to break and cast to the ground.

On this account the peasants hailed a great windstorm as a blessing, because it was apt to cast enough of "windfalls" for winter firewood. From this old-time forestry custom comes the modern application of the expression. At one time it was decreed that only such limbs and whole trees as should fall during the three summer months could be used as firewood, but the unjustness of the act was so plainly apparent that no attempt was ever made to enforce it.

Of making books there is no end—otherwise there would be fewer race-tracks.

BAD BLOOD
THE SOURCE OF ALL DISEASE

Every part of the body is dependent on the blood for nourishment and strength. When this life stream is flowing through the system in a state of purity and richness we are assured of perfect and uninterrupted health; because pure blood is nature's safe-guard against disease. When, however, the body is fed on weak, impure or polluted blood, the system is deprived of its strength, disease germs collect, and the trouble is manifested in various ways. Pustular eruptions, pimples, rashes and the different skin affections show that the blood is in a feverish and diseased condition as a result of too much acid or the presence of some irritating humor. Sores and Ulcers are the result of morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood, and Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., are all deep-seated blood disorders that will continue to grow worse as long as the poison remains. These impurities and poisons find their way into the blood in various ways. Often a sluggish, inactive condition of the system, and torpid state of the avenues of bodily waste, leaves the refuse and waste matters to sour and form uric and other acids, which are taken up by the blood and distributed throughout the circulation. Coming in contact with contagious diseases is another cause for the poisoning of the blood; we also breathe the germs and microbes of Malaria into our lungs, and when these get into the blood in sufficient quantity it becomes a carrier of disease instead of health. Some are so unfortunate as to inherit bad blood, perhaps the dregs of some old constitutional disease of ancestors is handed down to them and they are constantly annoyed and troubled with it. Bad blood is the source of all disease, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and purified the body is sure to suffer in some way. For blood troubles of any character S. S. S. is the best remedy ever discovered. It goes down into the circulation and removes any and all poisons, supplies the healthful properties it needs, and completely and permanently cures blood diseases of every kind. The action of S. S. S. is so thorough that hereditary taints are removed and weak, diseased blood made strong and healthy so that disease cannot remain. It cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Sores and Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., and does not leave the slightest trace of the trouble for future outbreaks. The whole volume of blood is renewed and cleansed after a course of S. S. S. It is also nature's greatest tonic, made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and is absolutely harmless to any part of the system. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Book on the blood and any medical advice free to all who write.

Money Making Christians.

Those who decry the development of vast fortunes may be interested in the novel argument put forth by James Paterson Gledstone in a recent book entitled "Should Christians Make Fortunes?" This writer believes that the honest adoption and faithful living up to of the principles expounded by Christ "would put a restraint upon the growth of private capital and probably abolish it altogether." The effect upon individuals and masses of strict obedience to Christ's teachings Mr. Gledstone thus portrays:

> It would call a halt to the mad pace at which most are rushing along. It would spread the crushing work of ten or twenty or thirty years over forty or fifty years; men would not be too old "at forty." We should not see the sad spectacle of men at their best mentally and morally discarded for boys and youths, who can be obtained for less money and who have more physical force—though not always that. The quieter and saner life among a great body of Christian people would have a calming influence upon the rest.
> And, further, this unworldly manner of living does not imply that Christians would be poor, as that word is generally understood. Their avoidance of laying up treasures on earth would tend to simplicity of life, purity of taste, economy of means and enjoyment of nature, which makes no heavy charges for looking at the ever changing splendors of the skies and listening to the music of wind and water and observing the ways of birds, plants, insects and animals.

That the church of Christ has always inclined toward some form of "communism" or "socialism" this author avows, but he rises to a very high plane of economic thought when he declares that "men and women are the real capital." To quote further:

> A nation that has a large body of men who do not enter into competition to be rich, but are models of industry, frugality, honesty, temperance, would soon feel a new regenerating force at work within her. Every kind of industry would be remodeled.
> But without our great "captains of industry," without our great capitalists, how would much of the world's enterprise succeed? A good deal of it can afford to wait. Weightier matters require attention in our churches and in our nation, and unless they are attended to soon we may find that the world's enterprise, so far as we are concerned, cannot be attended to at all. "The white man's burden" is heavy, too heavy for decaying strength. Let him recruit himself; spare diet will do him good; his disease springs mostly from enlargement of dividends.

Dec. 19, 1606.

Next year the attention of the whole country, and of the world for that matter, will be fixed upon the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Jamestown, Va., by English colonists. Other important dates connected with the settlement of America by the English race will be recalled in the same connection. One of these dates is Dec. 19, 1606, when the ships of the king, the Discovery, the Godspeed and the Sarah Constant, sailed westward from the English port, bearing a strange company of men and women, who were to gain a foothold in the new world.

The fact that the three ships sent out on this venture landed at the place afterward called Jamestown was a mere accident. The site was declared by some of the company, John Smith, for example, as unsuitable. The objection was justified later, for the colony nearly starved there. The result might have been better and probably would have been no worse had the venturesome voyagers landed elsewhere than at Jamestown. But the brave spirit of these pioneers was the unconquerable thing in the whole expedition, and the event of their sailing across an unknown sea to savage wilds to build a new England deserves more than a passing thought.

Consul Jesse B. Jackson of Alexandretta describes the method in Asia Minor of providing a substitute for ice:

> Snow is gathered in the adjacent mountains and packed in a conical pit, tamped in tightly and covered with straw and leaves. At the bottom of the pit a well is dug, with a drain connected at the bottom to carry off the water formed from melted snow. As the cost of collecting and storing is very small, the only labor is in delivering to the consumers, which is accomplished by pack horses. The selling price is 10 to 25 cents per hundred pounds and often cheaper.

When Thomas Power O'Connor was leaving England for his recent trip to this country he gravely announced that he was taking a typewriting machine with him to America in order that the readers of T. P. O'C.'s London Weekly might find in its columns "the usual number of contributions from my pen." An innocent bull and perfect enough to have come from Sir Boyle Roche himself.

The Journal of Commerce says that all classes of American society is smitten with the get-rich-quick disease, being taken in by tales of recent discoveries of precious metals and the attractions of mining securities.

The magazine editors reached out for Secretary Taft and got him in the first round. But they won't print his articles under the old style headline, "By Our Fat Contributor."

M. Santos-Dumont recently won a $10,000 prize for a flying machine in Bagetelle, France, which is rather a large reward, coming from a town of that name.

No use wasting words to tell at which end the sultan came out in his recent tilt with his wives. Said wives are in the majority.

NEW OFFICERS ARE CHOSEN

Red River Valley Development and Immigration Association Now Ready for Business.

At a meeting of the Red River Valley Development and Immigration Association, held at Fargo, Wednesday, Jan. 16, for the purpose of electing permanent officers there was such a marked display of interest and enthusiasm in the work that the association intends to undertake in the development of this section of the country that its continuance and success seem evident.

The following are the names of the officers elected for the coming year:

P. H. Konzen, Hallock, president.

E. J. Weizer, Fargo, vice pres.

Thomas R. Brown, Jr. re elected secretary.

E. A. Huntoon, Moorhead, Treas.

These are the members of the board of directors:

J. W. Wheeler of Crookston.
B. F. Lounsberry of Wapheton.
H. H. Wheelock of Fargo.
J. S. Ulland of Fergus Falls.
A. L. Hanson of Ada.
Geo. Duis of Grand Forks.
J. F. Cashel of Grafton.
R. C. Mathwig of Warren.
Frank Lynch of Casselton, N. D.
E. Y. Sarles, Hillsboro, N. D.
J. A. Duffy, Red Lake Falls.
A. Stonehouse of Larimore.

The officers and members of the board are men of prominence and and their reputation for American enterprise and business sagacity makes their selection particularly appopriate in advancing the interests of an organization the character of the one in question. After the meeting of the new board which will be held in the course of the next ten days it is expected that everything will be in readiness for the launching out of the work.

During the meeting short addresses were made by delegates such as C. L. Sawyer, a member of the state legislature and secretary of the Minneapolis Real Estate board, who gave an interesting and enthusiastic talk upon the subject of publicity and development work. The representives of several publicity agencies outlined briefly several plans for the advertising and systematically advancing the interests of the valley. At the next meeting of the board arrangements will be finally made for the adoption of a good and effective plan of advertising the Red River Valley.

A committee, consisting of A. Stonehouse, A. P. Hanson, and E.J. Weiser was appointed to see what could be done with the railroads to secure as favorable treatment for land dealers residing in the valley as was granted land men from the outside. Strong resolutions were passed relative to the matter and it it is expected that some definite action will at once be taken by the committee.

Possesses wonderful medicine power over the human body, removing all disorders from your system, is what Rocky Mountain Tea will do. Makes you well, keeps you well. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets. A. L. Reichert.

Swift and straight as flight of crow,

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments, must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential. Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local. Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

BIG VICTORY

Red Lake Falls Wins Again In County Seat Controversy —Lower Court Reversed By Justice Brown— Syllabus In Full.

The long-expected decision in the county seat fight was handed down by Supreme Court Justice Brown last Friday.

The decision, as predicted in the Courier of two weeks ago, is favorable to Red Lake Falls, and, while not final, is a decisive victory.

Judge Brown reverses the findings of the trial judge and points out the errors in the judgment of the lower court.

The matter will probably rest for a time now before the Thief Riverites make another effort to bring the proposition to a vote.

The sooner there is a settlement of the matter the better and cheaper it will be for the residents of Red Lake county.

County seat removal fights are expensive and do much to retard the growth of the towns involved, and cost more in money and progress than any possible good that can come of a change.

Following is a verbatim copy of Justice Brown's decision:

14,936.

State of Minnesota, October Term, Supreme Court. A. D. 1907.

No. 126:

L. A. KAUFER, Appellant.

vs.

JAMES E. FORD, as County Auditor of Red Lake County, Respondent.

SYLLABUS:

A petition for the removal of the county seat of Red Lake county was dismissed by the board of county commissioners, when presented to it for action, without a consideration of its merits, on the ground that because of certain defects in the proceedings leading up to its presentation, the board had no jurisdiction to entertain the same. Immediately thereafter proceedings in mandamus were commenced against the board by a taxpayer and legal voter, on behalf of himself and all other legal voters of the county, to compel the members thereof to reconvene and hear and determine the petition upon its merits. Issue was joined, and all questions affecting the jurisdiction of the board to proceed in the matter were raised by the pleadings. Judgment was finally rendered therein, to the effect that the board had full and complete jurisdiction to hear the petition upon its merits, and its members were commanded to convene on the 11th day of June, 1906, then and there to consider and determine whether it had the requisite number of signers to justify calling an election to vote upon the proposition, and if so, to certify to the county auditor accordingly. Pursuant to the commands of the judgment, the board convened at the time stated, considered the petition upon its merits, found it in sufficient compliance with the statutes, and directed the auditor of the county to give notice of an election to vote upon the proposition, as required in such cases by the statutes. Thereafter this action was brought to restrain and enjoin the auditor from complying with the directions of the board, on the ground that the board had no jurisdiction to act in the matter, the grounds assigned being those which prompted the board originally to dismiss the petition; and, further, that the court below had no authority, by the judgment in the mandamus proceedings, to direct the commissioners to meet at a specified time, without further providing for the notice required to be given in such cases by sec. 396, R. L., 1905.

It is held:

1—That the judgment in the mandamus proceedings was final and conclusive upon all questions affecting the jurisdiction of the board to hear and determine the petition upon its merits, and these questions cannot be further litigated in this, or any other, action.

2—That proceeding was brought by a legal voter of the county, on behalf of himself and all other legal voters, and the judgment therein is conclusive as to all legal voters of the county upon all issues which were, or might have been, litigated therein, it not appearing that it was obtained by fraud or collusion.

3—That the trial court exceeded its authority in commanding the board to convene on a date named, then and there to determine the merits of the petition, without further requiring notice to the voters of the county, as required by sec. 396, R. L., 1905, and to this extent the judgment is invalid on its face.

4—That no valid certificate by the board of county commissioners to the effect that a proper petition had been filed can be issued by the board until after a hearing duly had, pursuant to the notice required by the statute referred to.

Order reversed.

The first of the automobile omnibus lines commenced running in Paris not long ago, says the Scientific American. Experiments had been made for a long time past, and the public became accustomed to seeing the omnibuses pass along the streets, but the system was not put into actual operation until the first week in June, when the line known as the Montmarte St. Germain des Pres was started. LOST IN SNOWSTORM.

Liveryman Had Narrow Escape of Being Frozen to Death Saturday Night.

Last Saturday, Dan Guerin, a liveryman, went to Gentilly on business. At about 8 o'clock in the evening he started back home in the severe storm. He had not gone very far when his horses, who had gotten snow blind, left the road and got into a drift. The snow flew thick and it was growing dark and Mr. Guerin had almost decided to wrap up in the blankets and spend the night on the prairie, when the horses advanced a few steps and ran into a partly covered fence. Mr. Guerin started them off and followed the fence till he reached the house of Joseph Page, where he was taken care of. He remained their till Monday morning, when he was taken home. His face was badly frozen, but he is now recovering.

KINGSTON LAID WASTE BY QUAKE

CAPITAL OF ISLAND OF JAMAICA DEVASTATED BY AN EARTHQUAKE.

LOSS OF LIFE IS VERY HEAVY.

FIRE FOLLOWS SHOCK AND COMPLETES THE WORK OF DESTRUCTION.

Kingston, the picturesque capital of the island of Jamaica, has been devastated by a violent earthquake.

Details of the disaster are lacking, as direct communication with the stricken city has been cut off. The land lines had been reconstructed to within five miles of Kingston Tuesday evening, and from meager reports received through such channels as were open it has been learned that many of the most important buildings have been destroyed and there has been serious loss of life.

Casualties Not Known.

So far as the reports indicate the fatalities number less than one hundred, though the hospitals are filled with injured and the list of victims may be materially increased.

Kingston and the other points of interest of the island are at this season of the year thronged with tourists from both America and England, and the greatest apprehension is felt for the safety of many persons who had recently arrived at the Jamaica resorts.

Distinguished Englishmen There.

The most distinguished of these were members of a party of English statesmen, agricultural experts and men of affairs, who, under the leadership of Sir Alfred Jones, had arrived in Kingston within the past few days to attend an agricultural conference there. Among those in the company were Hall Caine, the novelist; Viscount Montmorres, H. O. Arnold-Forester, M. P.; Sir Thomas Hughes, Sir Thomas Shann and others of equal prominence. The earl and countess of Dudley also were passengers on the steamer which carried out the Jones party.

Fire Follows Earthquake.

The first great shock was felt at 3:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, and, as in the San Francisco and Valparaiso disasters, flames immediately sprung from the wreckage to carry on the work of destruction. Tuesday afternoon the fire was still burning, although it was believed to be under control.

The Myrtle hotel, the principal hotel at Kingston, which probably sheltered the great bulk of the visitors on the island, is reported destroyed. The great military hospital was burned and forty soldiers are reported dead.

No Americans Missing.

Sir James Ferguson is said to have been instantly killed, but according to London reports no other Englishman, Canadian or American is believed to be missing.

The population, which numbers 50,000, is largely made up of native blacks. Many steamers carrying tourists to Jamaica were en route to the island when the earthquake occurred, but it so happened that, according to schedules, none of the ships from New York or Boston were in Kingston harbor Monday afternoon.

EVERY MESSAGE FROM JAMAICA BRINGS FRESH DETAILS OF AWFUL DISASTER.

THOUSANDS OF LIVES LOST

URGENT NEED OF SUPPLIES — ENGLAND AND AMERICA PLAN TO SEND AID.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 19. — The disaster here is as great as the calamities of San Francisco and Valparaiso Thousands of persons have been killed and the dead bodies are being taken from the debris by hundreds. The whole town is in ruins, and the greater portion is still smoldering ashes The smell of burnt flesh permeates the air

Thousands Stricken Down.

The earthquake came as a sudden oscillation, not from any particular direction, but up and down.

Thousands of persons were on the streets of Kingston at the time, and great numbers of them were crushed Many Americans in Kingston were killed and have been buried.

Part of the town of Port Royal has been sunk and two men were drowned The batteries sunk eight feet, killing a sapper. In several places the water is spouting through the debris.

Port Antonio, on the north of the island, suffered little damage. The Hotel Titchfield, with a hundred American guests, was not destroyed.

Inundated by Tidal Wave.

A tidal wave has inundated Annotta bay, washing out many houses.

The shock was severe at Richmond and this town also was detroyed by fire.

Spanish town also was damaged One man was killed and ten men were injured there.

The shipping in the harbor is safe There have been a number of other shocks since the first disastrous one, and the repetitions keep the people in a state of panic.

Summary of Situation.

According to information received yesterday the Kingston horror is growing. Communication with the island is partially restored, and every message that comes through brings fresh details of the appalling catastrophe.

A new horror is added to the situation by reports that the city seems to be slowly sinking into the sea. The contour of the bottom of the harbor has materially changed and two lighthouses at the harbor entrance are said to have disappeared.

Death List May Reach 1,200.

The number of dead is placed variously at from 500 to 1,200, and the number of injured runs into the thousands. Ten thousand people are said to be homeless. The danger of famine has increased and with it stalks the spectre of pestilence. There is urgent need for supplies of all kinds and energetic efforts are being made in this country and England to send aid.

The business section of the city has been wiped out, and the estimates of the damage range from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Eight Americans Dead.

Among the dead and injured are a number of prominent English persons, and almost every dispatch adds a new name to this list. Eight Americans are reported as missing, and it is said that many tourists undoubtedly were crushed by falling walls in the shopping district.

Now that the great blockade in Montana, near Cutbank, is opened, there is danger of another blockade in North Dakota. It has been snowing and blowing for the last twenty-four hours to such an extent that the drifts are piling over the rotaries, and if weather conditions do not give relief there is likely to be a worse blockade on the Great Northern system.

The officials are doing everything possible to keep the right of way clear On the Northern Pacific road conditions have remained the same in the last twenty-four hours. Trains are worked through the drifts by aid of rotaries.

NEWS OF THE STATE.

DRAINAGE SITUATION.

Geological Survey Issues First Map of Conditions in Minnesota.

The first drainage map for reclamation of swamp lands and a project for the improvement thereof was issued by the geological survey to A. G. Bernard, chairman of the executive committee of the National Drainage association. The association formally opened headquarters in Washington at 1410 New York avenue. The map shows that in the Red Lake reservation there is a swamp area of 402,000 acres, total estimate of cost of reclaiming amounting to $1,100,000. The assessment against the lands reclaimed is $3.25 per acre.

Senator Nelson has introduced an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, restoring to entry lands which were temporarily withdrawn in Minnesota for drainage surveys.

Senator Nelson has also introduced a bill to set aside certain lands of the White Earth reservation for a townsite.

Senator Clapp has been authorized by the senate to employ an additional clerk to the committee on Indian affairs.

An extensive plan for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands will be considered at an early meeting of the senate committee on public lands. The scheme is advanced in a bill introduced by Senator Clapp, which provides for the establishment of a "drainage fund," from all money received from the sale of public lands in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin, except the 5 per cent set aside by law for educational and other purposes.

Under the bill the secretary of the interior is directed to make examinations and survey for construction of works for the drainage of swamp lands and to report to congress on or before July 1 each year as to the result. The reports are to include estimates of all contemplated works, the quantity and the location of the lands which can be reclaimed and all facts relative to the practicability of the proposed projects.

EXPOSITION AID TO STATE.

President Cosgrove of the State Fair Board Says It Would Pay for Itself.

The annual address of C. N. Cosgrove, president of the State Agricultural society, was read before the annual convention of that body in Minneapolis. After referring briefly to the inadequacy of the lights provided by the street car company at the entrance to the grounds, and the lack of shelter for the crowds at the same place, Mr. Cosgrove launched into a consideration of the proposed exposition at the fair grounds to celebrate Minnesota's semi-centennial in 1908. He emphatically indorsed the project, saying in part:

"I believe a six weeks' exposition can be put on and ultimately not cost the state one cent, even outside the value in advertising and increase in population. In other words, let the state advance $1,500,000, or even $1,000,000, and your exposition receipts will not only pay running expenses, but say 25 per cent of the original outlay, all of which would be in the way of permanent improvements about as follows:

Sixty acres of land and fencing same	$50,000
Sewer cost	30,000
Electric connections	30,000
Foot bridge over tracks	15,000
Landscaping grounds, shrubbery, plants, etc	50,000
Agricultural building	75,000
Poultry building	50,000
Dairy hall	50,000
Main building	400,000
Grand stand	250,000
Total	$700,000

"The advantages of such a plan are, I think, too patent to require any explanation. As a matter of fact, we are running on a hand-to-mouth system, which is not only poor economy, but dangerous as well. Some day a fire may sweep the grounds with great loss of life as well as property, whereas the buildings heretofore mentioned, being of course of fireproof construction, would each help to keep the fire from the more combustible buildings now on the grounds.

"The erection of these buildings will require some two years; a goodly number could be completed this year ready for the 1907 fair, and the balance for the 1908 exposition. In the meantime our United States senators and members of congress could no doubt get the government to erect a building at a cost of $100,000 to $150,000, and make their usual exhibit at the exposition from the Smithsonian institute, the national museum, library of congress, the United States treasury and postoffice department, and thus give our citizens a chance to learn of the wonderful growth of our government, which 99 per cent of them would never otherwise have, and then donate their building to the state at the close of the exposition."

The convention of the state agricultural society closed with the election of officers of the governing board and the various branches of the association.

There was no change made in the personnel of the board, but C. M. Griggs of this city, formerly second vice president was made first vice president and B. F. Nelson of Minneapolis became second vice president. This is in accordance with the provision that the Twin Cities should alternate each year in having a first vice president. The other officers re-elected were: C. N. Cosgrove president and William E. Lee and William M. Liggett.

All of last year's officers of the Live Stock Breeders' association were reelected. The officers are: President, Thomas H. Canfield, Lake Park; first vice president, D. S. Hall, Buffalo Lake; second vice president, C. S. Crandall, Randolph; secretary, Andrew Boss; treasurer, J. C. Mills; executive committee, First district, J. J. Furlong, Austin; Second, L. C. Hodgson, Luverne; Third, John T. Timpane, Waterville; Fourth, Luke Stannard, Taylors Falls; Fifth, J. W. Baird, Edina Mills; Sixth, Thomas Harborn, St. Cloud; Seventh, Charles Kenneick, Osceola; Eighth, P. A. Christianson, Hinckley; Ninth, L. Lamberson, Warren.

The following officers were elected to head the Horse Breeders' association: President, H. W. Lightly, Austin; secretary and treasurer, G. W. Patterson, Worthington.

The Swine Breeders' association elected Finley McMartin of Clearmont president, and D. A. Gaunnitz of St. Anthony Park secretary and treasurer.

The officers elected by the Sheep Breeders' association were: President, Thomas Kough, Taopi; vice president, A. W. Edson, Austin; secretary and treasurer, C. K. Glotfalter, Waterville.

GOV. JOHNSON TAKES OATH

INAUGURATED FOR SECOND TIME BEFORE JOINT SESSION OF LEGISLATURE.

St. Paul, Jan. 10.—Without a dissenting voice the caucus of Republican members of the legislature last night nominated Knute Nelson of Alexandria as the Republican candidate for the United States senate. On Jan. 22 he will receive almost the unanimous vote of the legislature in his third election to the senate. The meeting was only technically a nominating caucus; practically it was a meeting, as was said by a speaker, to register the nomination made by the people of the Republican party.

In the Senate.

The thirty-fifth biennial session of the senate opened at noon yesterday, when Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart took the oath of office administered by Chief Justice Start of the state supreme court, and members were in their seats and the gallery was filled with spectators. The senators were then sworn in by congressional districts by the chief justice, after which the chaplain, Rev. J. W. Eckman of Dunnell, offered a prayer.

The Republican caucus nominees for officers were then formally elected and assumed their duties. Resolutions were passed providing for formal notification to the governor and the house that the senate was organized and ready for business.

In the House.

The house of representatives of the thirty-fifth legislature of Minnesota organized according to schedule yesterday noon by electing the officers nominated at the Republican caucus Monday evening. The usual resolutions regarding rules of procedure were passed, seats selected and the governor notified that the body was organized and ready to receive his message.

The oath of office was administered to the members by Justice Brown of the supreme court.

The officers elected by the Republican caucus were elected as follows: Speaker, L. H. Johnson, Minneapolis; chief clerk, A. E. L. Johnson; assistant, A. H. Vernon. After the appointment of the customary notification committees the house adjourned until 10 o'clock to-day, when the governor will deliver his message.

Gov. Johnson Inaugurated.

After taking the oath Gov. Johnson read his message, which was listened to with marked attention. At the conclusion of the reading of the message the governor held an informal reception, receiving the congratulations of the members of the legislature and others.

"Though somewhat averse to patent medicines, and still more averse to becoming a professional affidavit man, it seems only a plain duty in the present instance to add my experience to the columns already written concerning the curative powers of Peruna.

"I have been particularly benefited by its use for colds in the head and throat. I have been able to fully cure myself of a most severe attack in forty-eight hours by its use according to directions. I use it as a preventive whenever threatened with an attack.

SHE NEEDED ANOTHER HAND.

They Enjoyed the Show Immensely, But Failed to Applaud.

In the parquet at the Orpheum last night sat a young man and his best girl. People behind them noticed that the young couple seemed to enjoy the show immensely, but neither would applaud. They would look at each other and smile and say "Fine!" "Isn't that great!" and other such things, but they would not applaud. Everybody else near by was applauding and that started the people behind the young couple to wondering why they did not clap their hands and show their appreciation substantially, says the Denver Post.

Finally James H. Cullen came on the stage and began his singing stunt. His first two songs made big hits, but still the young couple did not applaud. His third song was even better than the other two, and it was then that the mystery as to why the young people did not applaud was explained to those behind them. When Cullen finished the song the girl turned to her escort.

"John," she said, loud enough for those behind to hear, "you'll have to let go my hand a minute. I've just got to applaud this man."

COSTLY PRESSURE.

Heart and Nerves Fail on Coffee.

A resident of a great western state puts the case regarding stimulants with a comprehensive brevity that is admirable. He says:

"I am 56 years old and have had considerable experience with stimulants. They are all alike—a mortgage on reserved energy at ruinous interest. As the whip stimulates but does not strengthen the horse, so do stimulants act upon the human system. Feeling this way, I gave up coffee and all other stimulants and began the use of Postum Food coffee some months ago. The beneficial results have been apparent from the first. The rheumatism that I used to suffer from has left me. I sleep sounder, my nerves are steadier and my brain clearer. And I bear testimony also to the food value of Postum—something that is lacking in coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason. BLOW AT COUNTRY MERCHANTS.

There is an effort being made by the big mail-order and catalogue houses to push through congress a parcel post bill.

This, if passed, would do more injury to the business of the country merchant than appears at first thought. Should such a bill pass, the mail-order houses would be able to take at least half of the business now going to the country merchant for themselves and would crowd the rural free delivery with their catalogue goods.

The country merchants, whom a parcel post would do so much to ruin, seem to take but little interest in the matter and sit idly by and let things take their own course.

The country press all over the United States is up in arms to defeat the bill, and those whom it is trying to protect take no action in the matter.

Why would it not be a good idea for our Commercial club to bring the matter up at the next meeting and frame a petition to Congress or the senator and congressme from this district; get every business man in the city to sign it and make it a protest that would cause the lawmakers at Washington to "sit up and take notice?"

Could not all of the Commercial clubs in the other cities of this Congressional district do the same? Would not such a flood of protest bear some fruit?

The Courier would like to hear, for publication, the views on this matter of some of the business men who are interested.

PERHAPS THEY NEED IT.

John A. Ross, managing editor of the Kalamazoo Gazette, announces that the news department of the paper will be opened every day in the future with prayer by himself or some minister of the city.

"I believe that the reporters will be able to do better work and that the object of the newspaper will be more thoroughly reached in this way than heretofore," said Mr. Ross.

WHY PRISON NEWS SUSPENDED.

The Ohio Penitentiary News, for a number of years a famous and flourishing daily paper published by convicts, has suspended publication for the very good reason that there is not left in that penal institution, according to an exchange, a single man who can handle type. There is not a printer in the Ohio penitentiary.

For that Dandruff

There is one thing that will cure it—Ayer's Hair Vigor. It is a regular scalp-medicine. It quickly destroys the germs which cause this disease. The unhealthy scalp becomes healthy. The dandruff disappears, had to disappear. A healthy scalp means a great deal to you—healthy hair, no dandruff, no pimples, no eruptions.

DO YOU KNOW

That love keeps the family jars empty.

That it takes a soft man to spread himself.

That heated arguments are apt to come home to roost.

That occasionally you meet a wise man who looks otherwise.

That every man sees an earthly angel in the woman he loves.

That anything that is worth while is worth more or less money.

That an aggressive man soon acquires a reputation as a knocker.

That our idea of a heroine is a wife who could talk back but does not.

That as a troublemaker a jealous woman isn't in it with a jealous man.

That silence isn't necessarily golden; a talker may have something to say.

That every woman likes to be considered an authority on social affairs.

That but few people appreciate the rose until they encounter the thorn.

That many a crooked man has all the outward appearances of being straight.

That a married man is always telling of the fun he had when he was a bachelor.

That any woman who stoops to marry seldom gets time to straighten up again.

That the people with nothing to do but sit around and visit are such dreadful bores.

That a man isn't necessarily absent minded becauses he misplaces his confidence.

That some people's goodness is probably due to the fact they are never found out.

That a horseman would rather admit anything else than that he got the worst of a trade

That some reformers seem to have the idea that theirs is the only really useful occupation.

That some people think they can't use a Bible or a prayer book unless it is gilt edge.

That a man will give up smoking for a woman's sake if allowed to smoke for his own sake.

That there are a good many fool excuses, among which drunkenness appears to be in the lead.

That it is always expected to say of a woman that she "has been the making of her husband."

That it takes more than a heaven soaring steeple to overcome the self-adoring tendency of some churches.

That some people imagine that by being impudent they are showing others they are "as good as anybody."

That a man may go a social pace that will carry him beyond the limits of his income, but not very far beyond.

That if you did unto your friends as they would be done by, you wouldn't even have the core of, the apple left.

That trouble began when Eve got the idea into her head that she wanted to be a dressmaker.

That every time a girl is crossed in love she imagines that her heart is broken, but it only gets a very small dent.

High School Notes

[Edited by Miss Ina Linnihan.]

Miss Hansen changed Paul's seat unexpectedly Tuesday noon and now he occupies the foremost place in the Senior row.

One of the Seniors is constantly practicing slant writing. She is succeeding quite well.

Carrie got a laughing streak Tuesday afternoon. It must have been catching because everybody was enjoying themselves.

Some of the Thief River Cicero pupils kindly informed us that they are on the fifteenth chapter in the oration on Archias. We are on the third but we are taking composition work beside, which we all admit is no snap.

Strange to say the pet of the Senior class gets the blame of any misconduct on the part of the clsss.

The Athenians give their next program a week from Friday. Everybody invited.

Every night after school the boards in the assembly room have beautiful decorations. Those of you who are in Miss Hansen's spelling class better study your lessons.

Alfred Floan was busy decorating the boards Tuesday night.

Piles get quick relief from Dr. Shoop's Magic Ointment. Remember it's made made alone for Piles and it works with certainty and satisfaction. Itching, painful, protruding, or blind piles disappear like magic by its use. Try it and see. All dealers.

THIS IS WORTH SAVING.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to relieve any form of rheumatism or backache, also cleanse and strenghten the Kidneys and bladder, overcoming all urinary disorders, Bright's disease: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce: Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime.

A well known authoritie states that these ingredients are mainly of vegetable extraction, and harmless to use, and can be obtained at small cost from any good prescription pharmacy. Those who think they have kidney trouble or suffer with a lame back or weak bladder or rheumatism, should give this prescription a trial, as no harm can possibly follow its use, and it is said to do wonders for some people.

Death Benefit of Joseph Noel Paid By Foresters Within Two Weeks.

Another instance of the advisability for every one who desires to provide for their family after death is illustrated in the recent death, in this city, of Joseph Noel. Mr. Noel was a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters and was insured in the organization for $1,000. The financial secretary is in receipt of a check for this amount, made payable to the beneficiary, Merance Noel, wife of the deceased.

Fraternal societies are a good thing and should be encouraged, as statistics show.

SEVERE WEATHER.

Monday night and Tuesday morning made the record for cold weather so far this winter. Local thermometers registered all the way from 42 to 46 degrees below zero at 6 a. m. Tuesday morning. By noon the mercury had risen a few degrees and remained stationary throughout the afternoon. With the decline of the sun the thermometer started for the bottom again, and another cold night was dished up for this vicinity, but did not equal the low mark made 24 hours earlier.

This was unusually cold weather, even for this part of Minnesota.

LAST OF SERIES.

Colonial Saxaphone Quartette Will Be at the Metropolitan Opera House, Feb. 11.

The last of a series of entertainments given under the auspices of the Study club will take place Monday evening, Feb. 11. The comments printed below speak for the ability of the company:

The Auxvasse people were pleased at having the opportunity of hearing Mr. Williams last evening. Mr. Williams has the best voice we have heard for a long time, and should he return we assure him audience.-Review, Auxvasse, Mo.

Mr. Burt Mack has double advantage with his well trained voice and his instrumental playing. That he will succed goes without saying. He has that sympathetic quality that always pleases.—J. A. Van Wagenen, Pierce, Nebraska.

The singing of Mr. McCormick was another of the pleasing features. He sang two solos, each time being encored and responding to the wishes of the audience.—Webster City, (Iowa) Journal.

Mr. Paul Atkins is a bass singer of much ability, possessing a deep rich voice rarely equaled. He has had much experience in quartet work, and with his cornet and saxaphone work will be a valuable acquisition to any company.—H. G. O'Neal, Milton, Iowa.

I had headache also and neuralgia. My right eye, from pain, was of little use to me for years. The constant flow of urine kept my system depleted, causing nervous chills and night sweats. After trying seven different climates and using all kinds of medicine I had the good fortune to hear of Doan's Kidney Pills. This remedy has cured me. I am as well to-day as I was twenty years ago, and my eyesight is perfect."

The remnant of us who still lunch and dine is diminishing. The other night at one of the fashionable restaurants a very smart lady was observed by her distressed host to be refusing everything, from "homard a l'Americaine" to "peaches Melba." Will Open Up Immense Area of Free Homestead Lands.

The railway facilities of Western Canada have been taxed to the uttermost in recent years to transfer the surplus grain crop to the eastern markets and the seaboard. The large influx of settlers and the additional area put under crop have added largely to the grain product, and notwithstanding the increased railway facilities that have been placed at the disposal of the public, the question of transportation has proved to be a serious one.

It will, therefore, be good news to everyone interested in Western Canada to know that an authoritative statement has been given out by C. M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, that that railway will do its share towards moving the crop of 1907 from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to tide water, and thus assist in removing a serious obstacle which has faced the settlers during recent years. Mr. Hays, who has just completed a trip from Portage la Prairie to Edmonton in a prairie schooner, a distance of 735 miles, which was covered in eighteen days, is enthusiastic about the country.

This will be gratifying to settlers in the Canadian West, even if Mr. Hays declines to be bound to a time limit with the exactitude of a stop-watch. The Grand Trunk Pacific road will be in a position to take part in the transportation of the crop of 1907, and that will be satisfactory to the settlers in that country when the harvest is garnered.

The wheat crop of 1906 in Western Canada was about 90,000,000 bushels, and, with the increased acreage which is confidently expected to be put under crop next year, it is safely calculated that fully 125,000,000 bushels will be harvested in 1907. The necessity for increased transportation facilities are, therefore, apparent, and the statement made by Mr. Hays will bring encouragement to the farmers of the Canadian West, new and old. The opening up of additional thousands of free homesteads is thus assured by the agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere.

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XXVIII.—(Continued.)

"I shall read to you, gentlemen," resumed the counsel for the crown, "the confession of the criminal—the true murderer of Aloysius Brangwyn. I shall call before you three witnesses who will swear to the handwriting in which it appears. I shall call the first commissioner of police, who will tell you that the prisoner handed this document to him only as a proof of his own innocence of the crime with which it was the intention of the police to charge him, and not in fulfilment of that duty as a citizen which made it incumbent upon him not to conceal that crime, the more especially considering its magnitude. I shall draw your attention to the date of the document, which proves that the prisoner has been in possession of this guilty knowledge for a year."

Alexis Brangwyn's confession, handed in by the first commissioner of police, was brief and to the point:

"During my residence in Paris in the year —— I made the acquaintance of a girl, whose name it is not necessary to mention, with whom I lived. I allowed her to confuse my identity with that of my cousin, Aloysius. She addressed me by his name, and, although I did not repudiate it, I swear that I never otherwise deceived or misled her in respect to it. When the girl insisted on our marriage I forsook her and returned to London, where I lived in my uncle's house. Her father wrote to my uncle, denouncing my cousin by name. My cousin, Aloysius, when the accusation was brought against him, wrote from Paris to deny it, and demanded to be faced by his accuser. Before this could be accomplished I was myself brought into his presence, recognized, and denounced. I had no defense. My uncle threatened to disinherit me. I was desperately embarrassed at the time. I had many liabilities I could not meet, and I saw nothing but disgrace and ruin before me.

"In his first anger against my cousin my uncle had written to his solicitor a letter in which he instructed him to prepare a new will for his signature, constituting me his sole heir. He announced to me his intention of reversing that will — leaving everything to Aloysius. There was a violent scene between us, and we were alone in the house. I went out, intending to purchase a sufficient quantity of chloroform to put an end to my existence. When I returned I found that my uncle had fallen in a swoon upon the floor. I saturated a handkerchief with chloroform and placed it over his mouth and nostrils, and renewed it from time to time, and the idea for the disposal of the body occurred to me.

"The frame of the statue after ward known as Boadicea was but newly built up in the rough that day. I buried the body within it, and I worked all night, all day, and all next night and part of next day in the hope that it would appear too far advanced to be looked upon as a place of concealment. When the house in which my uncle had resided was about to be broken up, I bought the house in Agar Row in which my uncle's body was discovered. I purchased the statue at the sale through an ordinary agent, and I entrusted its removal to an old servant named Adolphe Grimaud, who is now blackmailing me.—(Signed) Alexis Brangwyn."

Three witnesses—one the editor of an art journal to which Alexis Brangwyn had been a frequent contributor, and two professional experts — swore positively to the fact that the entire document was in his handwriting.

Counsel for the prisoner did not dispute the fact. It was true that the document was written in the prisoner's presence, was in part dictated by him, and was in his possession from the time of its completion.

"That, my lord, and gentlemen of the jury, is the case of the crown," said the attorney general.

"I shall call but one witness," said the equally eminent counsel who appeared in the prisoner's behalf. "We admit the fact charged against us, and we can only trust to the hope which is strong within us that it will be recognized that the prisoner's position was absolutely forced upon him. I will not shrink, in the vain hope of sheltering my client, behind an illusory defense from the declaration that no man has a right to override the law. No heroism, no self-sacrifice, no virtue of his own, no pity for those who are allied to him by blood, no consideration for a friendship, however prolonged and tender, can in the eye of the law justify the concealment of a crime so foul as murder when once the fact is indisputably known. No father has a right to shield his child; no child has a right to shield a father. No mother can hide her daughter's crime without participating in it and sharing in its penalty. The dearest, the most sacred ties of affection afford no defense.

"Does this appear to you a barbarous provision? Not so, gentlemen. It is alike necessary and just. But the law of this land, although in itself it recognizes no palliation of an offense of the character with which the prisoner stands charged, empowers its ministers to recognize those palliations, and the judges of the English bench sit in their high places alike to do justice and to show mercy. Gentlemen, there lies before you no alternative. His lordship will tell you by and by that even I, who stand here to plead for the accused, have no alternative. I must tell you that there is but one verdict, and that verdict is one of 'guilty.' Do your duty, gentlemen, and do it without fear. You leave yourselves and you leave my long-suffering and deeply injured client in the hands of one in whom you may safely repose the most unshaken confidence. To you, my lord, I dare address but one word only. You will let your own heart speak."

There were tears in court, there were tears in the jury box, even the judge himself was visibly affected. There was a moment's silence, broken only by sobbings here and there, and then counsel, rising from the seat into which he had fallen at his last word, said:

"Call William Molesworth."

A gray haired man, attired with an old-fashioned precision, stepped into the box and was sworn. He was deeply moved, and at first answered questions put to him with difficulty.

"Your name is William Molesworth? You are a solicitor in practice in Lincoln's Inn? Will you tell me if I have been rightly informed that Aloysius Brangwyn the elder, the confession of whose murder by his nephew, Alexis, you have just heard, was your first client of importance?"

"He was actually my first. He and my elder brother were old schoolfellows, and my brother introduced me."

"How long did you continue to transact his legal business?"

"Until the legal presumption of his death, two years after his decease."

"On what personal terms did you stand with your client?"

"For the last forty-five years of his life on terms of intimate friendship."

"You were aware of his testamentary dispositions, we may assume?"

"I drew up the only will he ever signed."

"Will you tell us how his fortune was bequeathed?"

"It was divided equally between his nephews. There were some minor bequests, with regard to which I have not refreshed my memory."

"Precisely. They are of no moment, Mr. Molesworth. Was the fortune a large one?"

"The personality was sworn under £523,000."

"So that each of his heirs had to look forward to an inheritance of a quarter of a million?"

"Rather more."

"Rather more. Were they both aware of this?"

"Mr. Brangwyn asked me to read and explain the will to his great-nephews on their twenty-first birthday."

"Did he give you a reason for that?"

"Well, he made the reading of the will the occasion for a little sermon. He told the young men that he relied on and had faith in their honor, but he wished them to understand that they had large expectations, and that those expectations would be forfeited if either of them were guilty to his knowledge of any conduct seriously unworthy of a Christian gentleman."

"Did you receive from him a few days before his disappearance a letter relating to the prisoner?"

"Yes. He had received news of an act of his which he described as that of a dastard and a scoundrel. He gave me instructions to prepare a new will bequeathing everything to his nephew, Alexis, and charging the estate with an annual payment of two hundred and fifty pounds to his elder nephew."

"Now we know that Mr. Brangwyn was foully murdered before that second will was drawn?"

"It was only half drafted at the time."

"You had a strong presumption that the prisoner had a hand in his disappearance?"

"I believed him to have murdered my old friend."

"Did you tell him so?"

"To my bitter grief and shame, I did."

"How long did that belief continue in your mind?"

"Until he was publicly exculpated by the attorney general at Bow street."

"I have been given to understand, Mr. Molesworth, that you expressed your belief with some freedom."

"I expressed it, to my undying regret and remorse, everywhere and anywhere when occasion offered."

"The prisoner knew this?"

"He knew it only too well." The witness's voice broke, and he wept.

"You know that if he had chosen to inculpate his cousin he could have convinced you of his innocence at any moment?"

"I know it, Mr. Atkinson. I know it." Atkinson, G. C., and the venerable solicitor were old friends and old professional associates.

"And will you tell us why, in your opinion, he refrained from action?"

"Why, sir? Because he would not stoop to soil the name he bears."

"Had he gone to the police at any time after the discovery of the body in the house in Agar Row he could added a quarter of a million sterling to his fortune, and could have escaped the calumnies which have so long pursued him?"

"There is nothing clearer in the world."

"Thank you, Mr. Molesworth. I will not trouble you longer. That, my lord and gentlemen of the jury, is the case on which we appeal to the clemency of the court."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the judge, "my task is a brief one. I have only to tell you that each of the able and eminent counsel who have been concerned in this case have rightly instructed you in this matter. You have no option but to return a verdict against the prisoner."

"Gentlemen of the jury, how say you?" and so forth.

"Guilty," said the foreman.

"Aloysius Brangwyn," said the judge, and Aloysius stood up. That inflexible will which had so long sustained him upbore him now, but his face worked strongly. The onlookers had lost all restraint, and were sobbing like an audience at the teater. "You have been found guilty by the verdict of a jury of your countrymen. You may be assured that in the tragic circumstances in which you stand you have the profoundest sympathy of all good men to whom the story of your offense is known. I am compelled to pass sentence upon you. I am sorry to affix that awful stigma to your name, but I am taking the most merciful course which suggests itself to my mind. The sentence of the court upon you is that you be kept in custody for one day, dating from the beginning of this assize."

The whole court rose and surged and seemed to rock with cheers. The waiting crowd caught up the cheer outside.

"Ask Mr. Aloysius Brangwyn to my private room until this excitement has subsided," said the judge to one of his attendants.

CHAPTER XXIX.

What of Alexis?

On the morning on which Lilian awaited Mrs. Billery on the platform at Victoria he sat at breakfast with two or three newspapers within reach on the floor beside him. He had skimmed one for its general news, but he had gone carefully through the Parisian intelligence of all of them, and had found no word of Lepelletier. So another day had gone by and the doomed wretch had said nothing to involve others in his own ruin.

He could do nothing for himself, of course, and he had no outer inducement to harm anybody. He had no revenge to wreak upon Alexis, who had yielded to his demands without so much as a word of protest. There was just the possible risk that in a sort of wild beast rage he might determine to spread devastation round him. That was all. But Alexis was curiously sensitive to risk and he had cultivated the tendency to look out for danger signals. He had had long periods of respite, years when he had been free of all fear of active interference. His soul was a shallow little pool in which any flaw of wind could raise a tempest which subsided as soon as its cause ceased to act.

He was settling down into security again. The absence of alarming news from Paris had a disproportionate value for him. As a matter of fact, it meant nothing, and less than nothing. Lepelletier had weeks and weeks of life before him, and if he were going to speak at all might speak now or a month from now. But it did so happen that he was unusually gay and light hearted that morning. There are men who are so constituted that they can suffer agonies of remorse at intervals when anything occurs to remind them of wrongdoing, and can be cheerful and even vivacious between whiles.

(To Be Continued.)

PATENT OFFICE IS FLOODED.

Press of Inventions Leads to Demand for Larger Quarters.

The inventive breed is not dying out in America. The commissioner of patents at Washington calls loudly for larger quarters, more clerks and bigger pay for overworked examiners. There is such a flood of new devices pouring into the patent office as was never seen before. The examiners are fairly swamped and are a full year behind in their work.

Naturally enough, motors and submarine and aerial navigating devices lead the list. Modern man insists upon flying, and the inventor who adds speed to his passing to and fro upon the earth, in the air, or in or under the water is certain of his reward.

The inventors are no believers in the early coming of peace among the nations, for improvements upon weapons and new explosives are well nigh as numerous as new motors. Yet with all this gunning for gain and racing for fame on the part of the inventors the chances are that some unconsidered trifle like the wooden ball with a rubber string or the globe catch for women's purses will win the largest rewards in the future as in the past.

New Art.

"I tell you," said the tall man with the carroty whiskers, "the Chinese are getting wiser every day."

"I should say they are," replied the short man in the green suspenders. "Why, my laundryman has actually taken up pyrography."

"You don't mean it?"

"Yes, his specialty now is burning designs on shirts."

No Danger.

Estimating the Damage.

That spirit of thrift popularly supposed to pervade New England is amusingly illustrated by the observation of a Connecticut farmer.

The good man had been seriously ill in midsummer, but by reason of his strong constitution he quickly rallied. On being asked in the autumn how he was feeling he replied in a cheerful tone:

"Pretty fair, now, thanks. Anyway, it don't make much difference, seein' that the farm's well fixed up. If I'd died in hayin' or harvestin' time, I calkilate it'd been $50 damage to me." Then, after a pause, he added:

"Come to think of it, that's too low a figure—$65 would be nearer!"

SCALY ERUPTION ON BODY.

Doctors and Remedies Fruitless—Suffered 10 Years—Completely Cured by Cuticura.

"When I was about nine years old small sores appeared on each of my lower limbs. I scratched them with a brass pin and shortly afterwards both of those limbs became so sore that I could scarcely walk. When I had been suffering for about a month the sores began to heal, but small scaly eruptions appeared where the sores had been. From that time onward I was troubled by such severe itching that, until I became accustomed to it, I would scratch the sores until the blood began to flow. This would stop the itching for a few days, but scaly places would appear again and the itching would accompany them. After I suffered about ten years I made a renewed effort to effect a cure. The eruptions by this time had appeared on every part of my body except my face and hands. The best doctors in my native county advised me to use arsenic in small doses and a salve. I then used to bathe the sores in a mixture which gave almost intolerable pain. In addition I used other remedies, such as iodine, sulphur, zinc salve, ——'s Salve, —— Ointment, and in fact I was continually giving some remedy a fair trial, never using less than one or two boxes or bottles. All this was fruitless. Finally my hair began to fall out and I was rapidly becoming bald. I used ——'s ——, but it did no good. A few months after, having used almost everything else, I thought I would try Cuticura Ointment, having previously used Cuticura Soap and being pleased with it. After using three boxes I was completely cured, and my hair was restored, after fourteen years of suffering and an expenditure of at least $50 or $60 in vainly endeavoring to find a cure. I shall be glad to write to any one who may be interested in my cure. B. Hiram Mattingly, Vermillion, S. Dak., Aug. 18, 1906."

A SIMPLE FORMULA

PRESCRIPTION OF AN EMINENT SPECIALIST IS GIVEN.

Necessary Ingredients Cost Little and Can Be Secured at Any Good Drug Store—Will Break a Cold Quickly.

Mix half ounce of the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine with two ounces of glycerine and half a pint of good whisky; shake well and use in teaspoonful doses. A noted authority on diseases of the throat and lungs who established a camp for consumptives in the pine woods of Maine, declares that the above formula will heal the lungs and cure any cough that is curable. It will break up a cold in twenty-four hours. The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing; each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper, showing the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O. —plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is also said to be a perfect neutralizing agent for uric acid.

Logical Deduction.

The old man hobbled into the office of a life insurance agent.

"I want to get my life insured," he said.

"Sorry, sir," replied the agent, "but I cannot insure you."

"What's the reason you can't?" demanded the applicant.

"Because of your age," explained the other. "By the way, how old are you?"

"Ninety-three."

"But you insure men of fifty."

"Oh, yes; but that's quite different."

"But the difference is in my favor," protested the old man. "I can prove by your own figures that fewer men die at the age of ninety-three than at fifty."

Color and Light.

The peculiar simplicity of the country darky in the South is illustrated by a story told by Representative John Sharp Williams.

An old negro had gone to a postoffice in Mississippi and offered for the mail a letter that was over the weight specified for a single stamp.

"This is too heavy," said the postmaster. "You will have to put another stamp on it."

The old darky's eyes widened in astonishment. "Will anudder stamp make it any lighter, boss?" he asked.

Cow Disappoints Him.

George Bierce of Sharon, Conn., hired as a farm helper a newly arrived foreigner named Ogliguski. The farmer handed him a three-legged stool and pail and introduced him to Old Spot, a good, easy milker.

Ogliguski bravely placed the stool upside down under the cow, put the pail between the legs of the stool, and then stood back and waited for results.

Not Straight Enough.

"He's the ruler of that ward, isn't he?"

"Oh, no; he's the machine boss of the ward."

"Well, 'machine boss' or 'ruler,' what's the difference?"

"My friend, the word 'ruler' suggests something straight."

In the religious game the fans always want their pictures taken with the pennant.

NEW MOVE BY PRESIDENT.

Chief Executive In Personal Charge of Legislation He Desires.

President Roosevelt in his efforts to secure legislation which he thinks is necessary to the welfare of the country has introduced at Washington a new custom, which is very offensive to the senate and to many members of the house, by taking personal charge of legislative measures and exercising his powerful influence to secure their consideration and adoption.

Without considering the propriety of the executive interference in legislative affairs, which always has been and always will be done, it would be a great deal better to legalize it in this country on the English plan, says the Washington Star. Over there the government submits certain bills which it considers necessary to become laws and on a certain day in the session the leader of the house, who is usually the prime minister, moves the postponement of all other measures so that they can receive undivided attention. It would be a great deal better if the president of the United States, through the chairman of the committee on ways and means in the house and the chairman of the committee on appropriations in the senate, should give the indorsement of the administration formally and officially to such measures as he thinks are necessary to the public welfare and let the leaders of the majority in both houses move the indefinite postponement of everything else, as is done in England. That would accomplish directly and personally what the president now attempts to do indirectly and unofficially and he would not be accused of bulldozing and bribery by patronage to secure the passage of his pet measures.

CARES LITTLE FOR SOCIETY.

Mrs. George Bruce Cortelyou Emphatically a Home Lover.

When George Bruce Cortelyou becomes secretary of the treasury his wife becomes in Washington parlance "the second lady of the cabinet." Mrs. Cortelyou is a woman of domestic tastes. She is devoted to home and to church life. She is active in all the works connected with St. Margaret's Protestant Episcopal church and was one of the leading figures in a bazaar given by the women of the Rector's Aid society for the benefit of a special parish fund.

Mrs. Cortelyou is the daughter of the president of the Hempstead (L. I.) institute, of which school her husband is a graduate. She never has cared particularly for the glamor of society, but in obedience to the dictates of the duties which her husband's position imposes, she recently has undertaken social responsibilities in connection with her other occupations.

As the wife of the secretary of the treasury more duties as a hostess will be incumbent upon her and she will bear them well, for she is a woman of grace and charm and, what is more, intellectuality. Mr. and Mrs. Cortelyou have four children, and as Mrs. Cortelyou has the older American idea that the mother should be all in all, the reason for former reluctance to enter into all Washington gayety may be understood readily.

Aspirant's Hopes Dashed.

President Roosevelt in his impulsive way sent for a well-known young writer and asked abruptly: "Do you know Spanish?" "No, Mr. President, I do not, I very much regret to say," was the reply. "I am sorry to hear it," commented the chief magistrate, and the subject was dropped. The young man went away deeply impressed with the idea that had he known Spanish he might have been appointed to a high office in the diplomatic corps, so he set to work assiduously, dropping everything else, and soon acquired a proficiency in that language. The other day he called at the White House and was cordially welcomed. In the course of conversation he said: "By the way, Mt. President, I know Spanish well; I both talk and read it with ease." "Oh, you don't say so!" was the president's reply; "then you ought to be one of the happiest men in the world; you can read 'Don Quixote' in the original."

"Hither" and "Thither."

"It does not seem to be generally known," remarked a department official, "that the dignified department of state has made a change in the form of official correspondence somewhat in the line of the simplified system of spelling.

"The particular change I have noticed is in the adoption of the good old English words 'hither' and 'thither' in place of their more modern and longer substitutes. For instance, the secretary of state now acknowledges the receipt of a communication forwarded through another department in the following style: "Referring to the reference hither by your department,' etc. It's all right, I know, but it has a strange look."

New Spelling Puzzles.

An official circular issued by the insular bureau of the war department refers to a certain ordinance as having been "past" by the Philippine commission, and a question has arisen as to whether that is the proper spelling of the word in the sense in which it is used, notwithstanding the spelling is in accordance with the list of 300 words designated by the president for simplified spelling in all the government departments. The spelling of the word as applied to legislative enactments will undoubtedly receive the attention of congress at the coming session.

THE FIRST TWINGE

Of Rheumatism Calls for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills If You Would Be Easily Cured.

Mr. Frank Little, a well known citizen of Portland, Ionia Co., Mich., was cured of a severe case of rheumatism by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In speaking about it recently, he said: "My body was run down and in no condition to withstand disease and about five years ago I began to feel rheumatic pains in my arms and across my back. My arms and legs grew numb and the rheumatism seemed to settle in every joint so that I could hardly move, while my arms were useless at times. I was unable to sleep or rest well and my heart pained me so terribly I could hardly stand it. My stomach became sour and bloated after eating and this grew so bad that I had inflammation of the stomach. I was extremely nervous and could not bear the least noise or excitement. One whole side of my body became paralyzed.

"As I said before, I had been suffering about five years and seemed to be able to get no relief from my doctors, when a friend here in Portland told me how Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had cured him of neuralgia in the face, even after the pain had drawn it to one side. I decided to try the pills and began to see some improvement soon after using them. This encouraged me to keep on until I was entirely cured. I have never had a return of the rheumatism or of the paralysis.

The pills are for sale by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Practical Use.

"Briggs told me that some fellow has discovered that man is made up of soap."

"Well, if Briggs would put his make-up to a little practical use he might have a cleaner mind."

Politeness.

Little Boy—That lady gave me some toffee.

Mother—I hope you were polite about it.

Little Boy—Yes, mamma. I said I wished pa had met her before he got acquainted with you.

Always to Be Depended Upon.

When a person gets up in the morning with a dull headache and a tired, stretchy feeling, it's an almost certain indication that the liver, or bowels, or both, are decidedly out of order.

At such times Nature, the wisest and best of doctors, takes this means to give warning that she needs the help and gentle assistance which can best be obtained from that old family remedy, Brandreth's Pills, which has been in use for over a century.

They are the same fine laxative tonic pill your grandparents used when doctors were few and far between, and when people had to have a remedy that could absolutely be depended upon.

Brandreth's Pills can be depended upon, and are sold in every drug and medicine store, plain or sugar-coated.

Hard on Biggs.

"There were two men got into a scrimmage in front of the bank today," said Mr. Biggs at the family supper table, "and it looked pretty bad for one of them. The biggest one grabbed a stick, and I thought that he was going to knock the other's brains out, so, of course, I jumped in between them."

The family had listened with rapt attention, and as Mr. Biggs paused in his narrative the young heir, whose respect for his father's bravery is immeasurable, proudly remarked:

"He couldn't knock any brains out of you, could he, father."

The head of the family gazed long and earnestly at the heir, as if to detect evidences of a budding humorist, but, as the youth continued to munch his tart with great innocence, he gulped and resumed his supper.

To say a man lacks tact is a polite way of saying he is impolite.

RHEUMATISM
CAN NOT BE RUBBED AWAY

It is perfectly natural to rub the spot that hurts, and when the muscles, nerves, joints and bones are throbbing and twitching with the pains of Rheumatism the sufferer is apt to turn to the liniment bottle, or some other external application, in an effort to get relief from the disease, by producing counter-irritation on the flesh. Such treatment will quiet the pain temporarily, but can have no direct curative effect on the real disease because it does not reach the blood, where the cause is located. Rheumatism is more than skin deep—it is rooted and grounded in the blood and can only be reached by constitutional treatment—IT CANNOT BE RUBBED AWAY. Rheumatism is due to an excess of uric acid in the blood, brought about by the accumulation in the system of refuse matter which the natural avenues of bodily waste, the Bowels and Kidneys, have failed to carry off. This refuse matter, coming in contact with the different acids of the body, forms uric acid which is absorbed into the blood and distributed to all parts of the body, and Rheumatism gets possession of the system. The aches and pains are only symptoms, and though they may be scattered or relieved for a time by surface treatment, they will reappear at the first exposure to cold or dampness, or after an attack of indigestion or other irregularity. Rheumatism can never be permanently cured while the circulation remains saturated with irritating, pain-producing uric acid poison. The disease will shift from muscle to muscle or joint to joint, settling on the nerves, causing inflammation and swelling and such terrible pains that the nervous system is often shattered, the health undermined, and perhaps the patient becomes deformed and crippled for life. S. S. S. thoroughly cleanses the blood and renovates the circulation by neutralizing the acids and expelling all foreign matter from the system. It warms and invigorates the blood so that instead of a weak, sour stream, constantly depositing acrid and corrosive matter in the muscles, nerves, joints and bones, the body is fed and nourished by rich, health-sustaining blood which completely and permanently cures Rheumatism. S. S. S. is composed of both purifying and tonic properties—just what is needed in every case of Rheumatism. It contains no potash, alkali or other mineral ingredient, but is made entirely of purifying, healing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks. If you are suffering from Rheumatism do not waste valuable time trying to rub a blood disease away, but begin the use of S. S. S. and write us about your case and our physicians will give you any information or advice desired free of charge and will send our special treatise on Rheumatism.

Washington School Notes.

The Fifth grade began the study of Europe this week.

The Fourth grade has finished its Physiology and the last half of the term will study the Geography of the home.

A reading table was started by Mr. Healy's room last week. We have four files of the Youth's Companion, brought weekly by different pupils; two files of the Children's Tribune, two of the Journal Junior, and one of the American Boy. These are all weekly papers and the children who are up to grade are allowed to read any time they have their lessons. Any of the pupils may take the papers home at night or read at intermission.

Both Fifth and Sixth grades will finish their History this month.

The Fifth grade had an examination on South America Monday.

Charlie Boughton, George Zeh and Ralph Bourdon have been transferred from the Lafayette school to our school.

Last September the Sixth grade pupils wrote letters to different parts of the world. Since that time we have received three replies—two of them from Australia.

The following communications are self-explanatory:

Department of Public Instruction,
Sydney, Dec. 4, 1906.

Sir: With reference to your letter of the 27th of September last, forwarding a communication from one of your pupils, Eiling L. Kindseth, and asking that it be handed to a school pupil in this State and that a reply be forwarded, I have to forward herewith two replies from pupils in the Tamworth Superior Public School.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
P. BOARD,
Under Secretary.

Mr. Lee E. Healy,
Red Lake Falls, Minn., U. S. A.

District Girls' School, Tamworth, New South Wales, Australia, 23rd November, 1906.

Dear Schoolfriend:

Having read your letter this morning, I will now try to answer your questions. Our school is divided into three departments, the Infants, the Boys and the Girls Departments, but the more advanced girls and boys study together. We study much the same subjects as you, but we also have Science, Brushwork, Geometry, Algebra, and the languages we study are French and Latin. There are fourteen teachers altogether in our school. During the months of June, July and August we have winter in Tamworth, and the frosts are very heavy, but the ice is so thin that it melts in a few hours. We have had a few light falls of snow, but that is a very unusual occurrence. The summer glides into winter so gradually that there is no noticeable break in the seasons. The summer months are, generally speaking, December, January and February, and during those months the heat is intense, the highest temperature being about 112 degrees. As the Christmas vacation falls during these hot months the towns west of the 147-degree meridian have six weeks holiday, and the towns east of this meridian, where the heat is exceptional, also have six weeks holiday. We have, besides, one week at Easter and one at Michaelmas, together with the 26th January, Anniversary Day, the 9th November, our King's birthday, and Good Friday, and for the last few years we have had Empire Day, 24th May, our late Queen's birthday.

Tamworth is a municipality and has many fine public buildings, the chief being the Post Office, the various banks and Council Chambers.

Farming is the chief industry carried on around here, wheat and maize being the chief cereals grown.

Our longest day is on the 21st December; the shortest, when the sun is furthest from us, is the 21st June. The sun is never directly above us but always directly to the north of us. Tamworth is about one hundred miles, in a straight line from the coast, but we can reach our principal seaport, Pt. Jackson, by rail in about nine hours.

Pt. Jackson is visited by the English Mail steamers, which include the P. & O. Line, and the Orient Steamers. Also the Messageries Maritimes, North German Lloyd, the Canadian Mail Steamers and the A. & A. Line and the Nippon Line. These are independent of the sailing vessels. We have also a line of Australian Mail steamers visiting the States of the Commonwealth.

We six States federated on the 1st January, 1901, and are hence called the Commonwealth.

Your letter made us feel that America and Australia are not so far apart, and we hope that it will not be the last. Yours faithfully, (Age 16 yrs.) RENA CALOV.

District Girls' School, Tamworth, New South Wales, Australia, November 23rd, 1906.

Dear Schoolfriend:

In answer to your letter asking of the climate and season of my town I can say we are having splendid weather at present, for the season which is now the beginning of summer. We have had plenty of rain, which pleased the farmers very much. Their chief work is dairying, pastoral purposes and agriculture. I attend the Tamworth District School.

Our chief studies include Arithmetic, Reading, Geography, Spelling, Theory of Music, Writing History, Drawing, French, Algebra, Art, Physical Culture, Botany, Domestic Economy, Singing and Geometry.

We are having a concert on the 28th and 29th of this month in which there are 21 children representing different nations in full dress. We are accustomed to having a concert at the end of every year, but I think this one will be better than all we have had. We have a Municipal Council and also a Mayor. The population of our town is about 6,000 and is the chief town of a mining, pastoral and agricultural district. It is situated on the Peel River, which is spanned by a bridge. We also have a Post and Telegraph office which is very large for the town in which it is situated.

I remain, your schoolfriend,
RUBY FITZSIMMONS.

BAND CONCERT ATTRACTS MANY

Fine Program of Music at the Metropolitan Opera House Friday Evening Much Enjoyed.

The monthly concert of the Red Lake Falls band last Friday night was one of the best arranged programs this community has heard for some time. The opera house was well filled by an appreciative audience and would have had its seating capacity taxed to its utmost had the weather not been so cold, as many feared to brave the blasts of Borias.

From the opening march to the closing one the program was good, very good, in fact, and much credit is due to Prof. Bruckman's selection of the pleasing music.

The overture "Jolly Robbers" was played with a snap and vim that carried the audience with it, while the cornet duet by Clem Brunelle and Harry Garceau was easily one of the features of the concert.

The Orpheus Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Buckman, Lee Healy, Berthon and Tracy gave an interpretation of the favorite Irish song "Killarney" as arranged by Brooks and the audience demanded an encore.

Paul Brunelle spoke cleverly of one who at present is much under discussion—Benedict Arnold—and at the close of his oration left doubt in the minds of many of his hearers as to whether Benedict Arnold was really as black as he was painted.

The selection from "The Bohemian Girl" was enthusiastically received, especially pleasing being J. B. Armstrong's solo on the baritone of the "Heart Bowed Down."

Harry Healy and Clem Brunelle gave a trombone and cornet duet, "The Pals," which was exceptionally good.

Thomas Germo, in a few well-chosen words, bade the new director welcome to Red Lake Falls on behalf of its citizens, and announced that an informal dance would follow the program.

Many availed themselves of the opportunity to forget the cold weather in an hour's enjoyment of the excellent dance music furnished by the orchestra.

Displaces Celluloid.

United States Consul McFarland, who is stationed at Reichenberg, Bohemia, reports that a substitute for celluloid has been discovered by a Gablontz experimenter. The new material is durable and cheap, costing but little more than glass. The most ridgid test will prove to you the superiority of golden grain belt beer. Its daily use will aid your digestion, steady your nerves and build you up physically. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

A good story will always bear repeating, says an old saw, and the following will probably bear out the saying: "There lived in a rather sparcely settled Pennsylvania district a man whose family consisted of seven sons. One after the other they left the paternal roof and made but a small dent in the great world and none ever helped the old man in a financial way. At last, there was only one son left. His name was Bill. After much discussion, father decided to make a minister of him. Bill, after being ordained, was assigned to a very poor and sparsely settled parish, but by dint of hard work and perseverance, built up a good, though poor congregation. In appreciation of his efforts, the congregation decided to make Bill a present and a subscription was taken up, netting $9.85. After much bickering it was decided to invest the money in a horse for Bill, and an old, lean, half-starved equine was secured. Bill was greatly pleased and decided to make a trip home on his horse and show his father the gift. After many days travel Bill arrived home and was met at the gate by his father, who exclaimed: "Why, Bill, what have you there?" "Father, that is a horse, which my congregation presented me." Father examined the steed and shook his head. Bill said: "Father, that is a good horse. Why, the Lord rode on a horse like that." Father examined the horse again and after the inspection, remarked: "Bill, I guess it's the same horse."

FANCY POULTRY ON EXHIBITION

D. E. Hale Will Be Here Saturday to Score the Birds—Poultry Breeders Invited to Attend.

Have you got some fine poultry? The Northern Minnesota Poultry Association of Red Lake Falls (while they have not been able to pull off a Poultry show this winter) have made arrangements with D. E. Hale, one of the foremost poultry judges of the country, and who was one of the judges at the State show—both last year and this—and who is now at the Montana State show, to stop off here on his way back from Montana and score any birds which may be placed on exhibition.

Mr. Hale is expected here Saturday morning, and any person having what he considers fine birds of any breed is invited to bring them on that day and have them scored. He will also give pointers on proper mating for best results.

Exhibitions of this kind will tend to promote and make more profitable poultry raising in this section preparatory to holding a successful show next winter.

Bring in your birds and have them inspected.

In case anything should happen to delay Mr. Hale and make it impossible for him to be in the city Saturday, the birds will be cared for by the members of the association, making it possible for the owners to return home if they live out of town.

Further information as to the details of the exhibit can be had by calling on P. O. Floan, president of the association.

For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm, put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalyptus, Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into a velvety, cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, etc. surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

SUFFER FROM COLD.

Son of Roadmaster Regan Tells of Intense Suffering in the Dakotas.

James F. Regan, son of Roadmaster E. J. Regan, of the Great Northern, who is here on a visit with his parents, reports much suffering from cold and snow in the Dakotas.

Mr. Regan is a conductor on the Dakota division of the Great Northern and tells of the hardships of homesteaders along his run. Fuel is so scarce, says Mr. Regan, that those living some distance from the towns and cities have burned their furniture, while others have turned their cattle loose on the prairies and burned their barns for fuel. Some cases of settlers putting down telegraph poles and taking ties from the railroads, have also been reported.

Wood at Larimore is held at $10 a cord and is scarce at that price, while coal is not to be obtained at any price.

There have been many cases of persons freezing to death on account of the fuel famine.

COLD WAVE AT NORTH YAKIMA

Washington Weather Goes Below Zero and Great Damage is Done to Fruits.

North Yakima, Wash., that mecca for so many people from this city and vicinity who left good farms in the Red River Valley and prosperous business enterprises here to go to the country which was supposed to be a perfect paradise, is suffering from a cold wave, that threatens the entire ruination of the fruit business upon which the country practically depends as its principle source of livelihood. Letter received by Red Lake Falls people from there state that the thermometer registered 12 degrees below zero. The entire watermain system of the city is frozen up and the terrible plight of a city larger than Crookston may be imagined when its water supply is practically shut off. It will be remembered that Yakima is the place where they had such a coal and fuel famine that trains were stopped and people took coal from them by mob violence. The greatest blow to the country will be the backset which will follow in the fruit business. Peaches, apples and other fruits which are not acclimated to such cold weather will be so chilled that if they are not entirely ruined and worthless, they will receieve a set-back from which it will take a year to recover.

To stop a Cold with "Preventics" is safer than to let it run and cure it afterwards. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will head off all colds and grippe, and perhaps save you from Pneumonia or Bronchitis. Preventics are little toothsome candy cold cure tablets selling in 5-cent and 25-cent boxes. If you are chilly if you begin to sneeze, try Preventics. Sold by all dealers.

KINGSTON SLOWLY SINKING INTO SEA

THOUSANDS OF LIVES LOST

URGENT NEED OF SUPPLIES — ENGLAND AND AMERICA PLAN TO SEND AID.

Kingston, the beautiful capital of the Island of Jamaica, was devastated by an earthquake Monday afternoon, Jan. 14. Fire quickly followed the shock and practically completed the work of destruction.

In its disastrous effects, both to life and property, the disaster is as great as the calamity of San Francisco and Valparaiso.

The destruction of all cable communication made it impossible to get accurate details of the disaster for several days, but as reports come in they add to the awful horror of the calamity.

Estimates of the loss of life place the number of dead at over a thousand, among whom are many persons of prominence in the community.

The property loss is variously estimated at from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000.

One description of the earthquake said that the city "rocked like a ship in a choppy sea," and that "when the fire started the scene was hellish."

City Will Be Swallowed Up.

A new horror is added to the situation by reports that the city seems to be slowly sinking into the sea. The contour of the bottom of the harbor has materially changed and two lighthouses at the harbor entrance are said to have disappeared.

Thousands Stricken Down.

The earthquake came as a sudden oscillation, not from any particular direction, but up and down.

Thousands of persons were on the streets of Kingston at the time, and great numbers of them were crushed. Many Americans in Kingston were killed and have been buried.

Part of the town of Port Royal has been sunk and two men were drowned The batteries sunk eight feet, killing a sapper. In several places the water is spouting through the debris.

Port Antonio, on the north of the island, suffered little damage. The Hotel Titchfield, with a hundred American guests, was not detroyed.

"KING'S HOUSE," THE GOVERNOR'S RESIDENCE.

Inundated by Tidal Wave.

A tidal wave has inundated Annotta bay, washing out many houses.

The shock was severe at Richmond, and this town also was detroyed by fire.

Spanish town also was damaged. One man was killed and ten men were injured there.

The shipping in the harbor is safe. There have been a number of other shocks since the first disastrous one, and the repetitions keep the people in a state of panic.

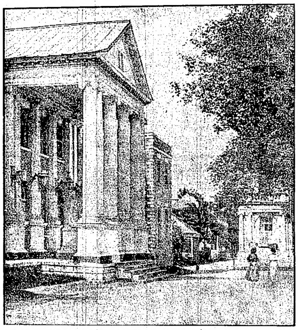
Death List May Reach 1,200.

The number of dead is placed variously at from 500 to 1,200, and the number of injured runs into the thousands. Ten thousand people are said to be homeless. The danger of famine has increased and with it stalks the spectre of pestilence. There is urgent need for supplies of all kinds and energetic efforts are being made in this country and England to send aid.

The business section of the city has been wiped out, and the estimates of the damage range from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000.

The situation at Kingston seems to be improving. Order has been re-established and the work of burying the dead and caring for the injured is progressing on an organized basis.

The work of sending in relief to the stricken city is proceeding with energy. Kingston is receiving supplies as far as possible from the island of Jamaica itself. The American warships in the harbor have put on shore all the foodstuffs and medical supplies they could spare, and the Jamaican authorities have taken charge of the distribution of all provisions in the city.



KING'S HOUSE, KINGSTON.

Relief on Big Scale.

In addition, relief is being hurried from outside quarters. The senate yesterday passed a bill authorizing relief for the stricken island; the people of the British island of Trinidad have sent a first installment of relief; H. M. S. Indefatigable has left Port of Spain, Trinidad, with provisions, clothing and other supplie for the stricken people; the French government has started a cruiser from the island of Martinique with supplies for Kingston; the Mansion House fund in London is growing rapidly and the British authorities are perfecting the details of relief on a large scale, and in addition various other steamers are either on their way or about to start for Kingston with food, clothing and medicines aboard.

Rumor of Tidal Wave.

The report that a tidal wave had devastated the southern shore of Jamaica had not been confirmed up to a very late hour. Cable communication with the island has been partially retored, but, even so, messages from Jamaica are coming through very slowly.

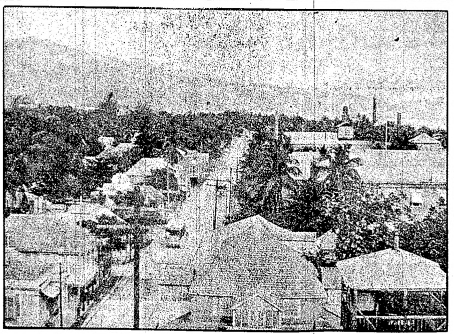
The total estimate of deaths remain at about 1,000.

Great relief was afforded last night to all those who have American friends in Jamaica by a statement received from the office of the cable company at Kingston that up to 7 o'clock Thursday evening no Americans had been reported killed or severely wounded by the earthquake.

List of Victims Growing.

The list of known victims is growing and the names of no less than forty persons of more or less prominence in the Jamaican capital already have been given out as dead. About twenty well known people are either injured or missing.

The reports received yesterday make no mention of further earthquakes and the fires all have been put out.



HARBOUR STREET, KINGSTON, ISLAND OF JAMAICA.

U. S. Marines on Guard.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 20. — The streets of this city are now picketed with American guards. Admiral Evans, at the request of the British authorities, landed a force of marines from the battleships Missouri and Indiana.

Six hundred bodies have been recovered and more are being constantly found.

Dynamite is being employed to clear away the debris of shattered buildings.

Eight Americans Dead.

Among the dead and injured are a number of prominent English persons, and almost every dispatch adds a new name to this list. Eight Americans are reported as missing, and it is said that many tourists undoubtedly were crushed by falling walls in the shopping district.

The American battleships Missouri and Indiana have reached the scene and American officers and sailors are standing by, ready to render every assistance in their power.

Royal Family Sets Example.

London, Jan. 19. — With characteristic promptness, the royal family hastened to set the country an example of generous assistance to the afflicted city of Kingston. The king and queen have each contributed $5,000 to the lord mayor's fund. The prince and princess of Wales have contributed $2,500 each, and the big companies interested in the West Indies are following suit.

GREAT NORTHERN MUST OBEY LAW

PROPOSED $60,000,000 STOCK INCREASE IS STOPPED BY AN INJUNCTION.

COMPLETE VICTORY FOR STATE

JUDGE HALLAM RULES FAVORABLY ON ALL CONTENTIONS OF THE STATE.

St. Paul, Jan. 25.—Judge Oscar Hallam of the Ramsey county court has granted the request of the State of Minnesota for a temporary injunction against the Great Northern railway's proposed $60,000,000 increase of capital stock. All points made by the state were sustained.

The case came before the court on an order to the defendant to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued prohibiting the defendant, during the pendency of the action and until the further order of the court, from making a proposed increase of its capital stock without first making application in writing to and obtaining the consent of the railroad and warehouse commission.

Injunction Is Granted.

Judge Hallam granted an injunction restraining the defendant from issuing this stock without first securing the consent of the railroad and warehouse commission.

The contention of the state was based on section 2872 of the Revised Laws of 1905, originally enacted as chapter 265, General Laws of 1887.

The defendant contended that the act of 1887 was in contravention of its charter; that it was unconstitutional as being a delegation of legislative power to an administrative board; that the act was repealed by chapter 227 of the Laws of 1889; that the revised law appealed to had received a practical construction both by the state officials and the defendant adverse to the contention of the state.

Sustains State's Points.

Judge Hallam resolves these several contentions against the defendant and in favor of the state.

Judge Hallam, indorsing the regulations provided by the general laws, says:

"The provident issue of stock by a railroad corporation is a matter of public concern, and the state has a right to insist that when such a corporation increases its stock there shall be a value behind the stock and it has the right to establish safeguards to that end. This is all the act in question does."

Judge Hallam's decision is a complete victory for the state.
